Paul Revere Rides Again

On Monday, April 20th, the infamous ride of Paul Revere and William Dawes was recreated. Revere and Dawes warned Samuel Adams and John Hancock of the British troops arrival. Revere and Dawes were joined by a third rider, Dr. Samuel Prescott. Soon after, all three were arrested by a British patrol. Pictured above is Mayor Martin Walsh handing Paul Revere the message to bring to Concord warning that the Regulars are coming.

Toastmaster

For the second year, the Commission for Social Justice and the Scholarship Commission, both under the auspices of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, are combining their signature events into one day, honoring the most prestigious Italian American leaders and students throughout the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge. This combined event, known as the Massachusetts Education and Law Awards, will take place on Sunday, May 3, 2015 at the Wyndham Boston Andover in Andover, Massachusetts.

The Commission for Social Justice is pleased and honored to announce the following recipients of this year's awards.

The "Justice Award" recipient is The Honorable Robert B. Calagione. Judge Calagione is an Associate Justice in the Westborough District Court and First Justice of the Milford District Court. He graduated from Georgetown University, and went on to receive his Juris Doctorate at Suffolk University Law School. He served as a private practice attorney for 21 years and as a clerk magistrate for three years before being appointed to the bench in 2001. He was appointed as Associate Justice in the Westborough District Court in 2001, and First Justice of the Milford District Court in 2004, and currently presides in both courts. Judge Calagione is a member of the Education Committee and Case Flow Management Committee of the District Court Department. He also serves as a mentor for new and current judicial members of the District Court. He is known and respected by district attorneys, law enforcement, and private attorneys for his fairness, demeanor, and temperament.

The recipient of the "Law Enforcement Award" is Chief Robert J. Ferullo Jr., Chief of the Woburn Police Department. He graduated from Northeastern University and Suffolk University Law School, and is a member of the Massachusetts Bar. Chief Ferullo has served in the Woburn Police Department since 1980, rose through the ranks and served as Sergeant, Lieutenant, and was finally promoted to Chief on October 1, 2011. Since becoming Chief, Ferullo has become known across the state for his dedication to the juvenile justice system and substance abuse education and prevention. He is an active participant in the Heroin Education Awareness Taskforce (HEAT) program, which seeks to educate the public about heroin abuse, and works to ensure treatment for addicts, especially given the recent rise in heroin related overdoses. He is also involved with the Clean Start program, which gives second chances to juvenile drug offenders. Chief Ferullo has received many awards, including multiple commendations from the State House, and recognition from the Woburn School Department for his efforts to improve school safety and for his service to the youth of the city of Woburn.

The recipient of the "Public Service Award" is Mayor Joseph A. Curtatone, Mayor of the City of Somerville. Currently serving a historic sixth term as Mayor, Curtatone was first elected in 2003 after serving as an Alderman At Large for eight years. He earned a bachelor's degree from Boston College, a Juris Doctorate from New England School of Law, and a Master's Degree in Public Administration from the Harvard Kennedy School. As Mayor, he has implemented a number of programs and reforms that have earned Somerville many regional and national distinctions, such as the "Best Run City in Massachusetts" from Boston Globe Magazine, one of the "100 Best Communities for Youth" by America's Promise Alliance, and one of ten "All America City" awards in 2009 from the National Civic League. He has spearheaded reforms for the city's police department, and created Neighborhood Impact Teams to monitor and improve the health, safety, and appearance of the city's business and residential neighborhoods. Delegates from other communities locally and internationally have modeled some of the city's programs, such as the SomerStat program (which harnesses data to evaluate, improve and increase the efficiency of city services), and a comprehensive 311 constituent services program. Under his leadership, the city has also gained national recognition for its "Shape Up Somerville" effort with Tufts University, which aims to reduce instances of childhood obesity. Mayor Curtatone has served as President of the Massachusetts Mayor's Association, a member of the Board of Directors for the National League of Cities, and a member of the Metropolitan Mayors Association.

The Toastmaster for the event is Lieutenant Governor Karyn E. Polito. Lieutenant Governor Polito is a member of Worcester Lodge # 168, and was the recipient of the Commission for Social Justice's Public Service Award in 2011. A former State Representative in the Eleventh Worcester District for 10 years, Polito was the driving force behind many key pieces of legislation, including the establishment of minimum mandatory sentencing for sex offenders, cracking down on drunk drivers, closing school registration loopholes for missing

Rubio Enters Presidential Race

Florida U.S. Senator Marco announced his intentions of being a presidential candidate next year. He is the latest Republican to jump into the race. Rubio, 43, called Hillary Clinton "yesterday" trying to claim the mantra of a new generation of political leaders. However, he shares this mantra with both U.S. Sens. Ted Cruz, R-Texas and Rand Paul, R-Kentucky. When it comes to the all important Latino voting bloc, he shares that with both Cruz and former Gov. Jeb Bush, who is yet to announce himself. Rubio called for a "new American century" and calling the 2016 election as a "generational choice." Obviously, a slam at both Hillary Clinton and Jeb Bush.

As he echoed, "Yesterday is over. We Americans are proud of our history, but our country has always been about the future."

Crony Clinton Capitalism

As the Wall Street Journal recently opined, "The Clintons didn't invent crony capitalism, but when it comes to exploiting government for private gain, nobody does it better."

Only weeks ago we all learned how foreign governments made donations to the Clinton Foundation while Hillary Clinton was Secretary of State. Liberals often go after conservative tea bag

PHIDIAS AND HIS ATHENIAN SCULPTURES

Ask any Italian-American who the world's greatest sculptor was, and Michelangelo will probably get the vote. The Greeks have their favorite, too. His name is Phidias, and he was born in Attica about 500 B.C. This particular time in Greek history is known as the "Age of Pericles" or "The Golden Age of Greece." Pericles was the statesman who gave out the commissions but it was Phidias who sculptured those splendid statues. In addition to his position as the superintendent of public works for Athens, Phidias directed the construction of the imposing entrance (Propylaea) to the Athenian Acropolis, numerous other works of art, and at least two of the most celebrated statues of Athena that the world has ever known.

The first of these masterpieces, the colossal statue of Athena Parthenos (the virgin goddess), was about thirty feet high, and it was sheathed in ivory and gold. All of the sculptured ornaments of the Parthenon were carved under the supervision of Phidias but the statue was the work of his own hand. This art form was called "Cryselephantine," which means that the statue was formed on plates of ivory, laid upon a core of wood or stone for the flesh parts, while the drapery and ornaments were of solid gold.

Athena was shown standing, and clothed in a tunic that reached to the ankles. She held a spear in her left hand and a six foot high image of Victory in her right. She wore a metal breast plate while her shield was resting on the ground at her feet. All of the gold portions were assembled so that they could easily be removed for safekeeping during times of war. It's easy to understand the reason for this feature when we realize that at today's market price all of the gold was worth about twenty-two million dollars.

The second masterpiece, the bronze statue of Athena Promachos (Athena the Warrior) was also attributed to Phidias. It stood on the Acropolis near the Parthenon and was erected by using the proceeds from the spoils taken at the battle of Marathon. The proportions of this statue were so colossal that the reflection from the tip of the lance and her helmet were visible to sailors as far away as the southern extremity of Attica.

The effort being put forth by Melina, the Greek Minister of Cultures and Science to secure the return of the Elgin marbles has received considerable publicity. Our current discussion concerning Phidias, the Acropolis, and the Parthenon, prompts me to explain that the Elgin marbles are a collection of ancient sculptures that were brought from Greece to England by the Thomas Bruce, Earl of Elgin, in 1812 while he was the British Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire.

It all started with the construction of the Parthenon during the Gold Age of Greece (about 450 B.C.). All of the building's sculptured work is believed to have been done under the direct supervision of Phidias. Like most ancient buildings, the Parthenon had its share of abuse down through the ages. It was used as a Roman temple, a Greek Orthodox Church, and even a Mohammedan Mosque. Greece

Not So Fast!

This week Congress started work on a Trade Promotion Act ("TPA"). Formerly called "fast track," TPA is an Act of Congress that authorizes the President to negotiate and sign a free trade agreement ("FTA") with another country or countries, with the provision that the FTA will be brought to congress for approval by both houses on an up-or-down vote with no amendments. TPA is important because no nation would negotiate with the U.S. if Congress, after the agreement is reached, could amend the agreement. TPA also puts a bill on a "fast track" in that it imposes a relatively compressed time schedule for consideration and vote on the bill.

My progressive friends say that fast track is a way to ram unpopular trade deals through Congress that kill U.S. jobs, grant special favors to nations with poor environmental and labor standards, and reward multinational corporations who, through a system of legalized bribery, have inordinate power in Washington. My TEA Party friends say that fast track is an unwise (possibly unconstitutional) handing over to the Executive of Congresses power to determine trade policy with a tendency to promote dangerous foreign entanglements. Both are, of course.

What is Fast Track or TPA?

Under TPA procedures, a free trade agreement, "FTA," is approved as a Congressional-Executive Agreement, rather than a treaty. This is due to the separation of powers under the U.S. Constitution —

- "[The President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." — Article 2, Sec. 2
- "Congress shall have power to lay and collect duties ..." — U.S. Constitution, Article 1, Sec. 8
- "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives ..." — Article 1, Sec. 7

Therefore, an FTA is not, in the U.S., a treaty. Treaties are negotiated by the President and approved by two-thirds of the Senate with no vote in the House. An FTA adjusts duties, which affects revenue and is therefore (Art. 1, Sec. 7) a "money bill," which must originate in the House.

Under TPA procedures the negotiation is entirely in the hands of the Executive, however, Congress may include negotiations objectives in the TPA bill. But the President must negotiate an agreement that can get a majority vote in each of the houses of Congress, where his party may not have a majority.

TPA is important as a signal to our negotiating partners that Congress has confidence in the President to negotiate an agreement that can be passed by Congress.

TPA is also important as the bill provides a vehicle for Congress to instruct the President, via the negotiation objectives set forth in the TPA bill, as to what he needs to do to get those majorities in the House and Senate.

However, it is not the case, as some have said, that you must have TPA to do an FTA. If you have the votes to pass the FTA you have the votes in the House to bring the FTA up for a vote under a "closed rule," meaning no amendments are allowed. It is commonly stated that Senate does not have the "closed rule," however, that is clearly mis-

THOUGHTS BY DAN ABOUT THIS & THAT

with Daniel A. DiCenso

CATHERINE DE' MEDICI

(April 13, 1519 — January 5, 1589):

The Matriarch Pulls the Strings

Catherine de' Medici is widely regarded as the most powerful woman in 16th century Europe, but her influence started with her family. In the end, she not only put her three sons (Francis II, Charles IX, and Henry III) on the French throne, but controlled almost all of their actions. Which, under their name, and by extension her own, were some of the greatest atrocities in the history of France.

Perhaps it was precisely because she was denied power for so long that she rose so fiercely after the death of her husband King Henry II in 1559. Her marriage to King Henry was plagued by a lot of the same problems that always affected monarchies. For a while, it seemed as if they would not be able to reproduce and the lack of a son was detrimental to the King. As a result, their marriage (though passionate at first) became loveless and the King turned his attention to his mistresses. One of them, Filippa Duci, gave birth to his daughter Diane de France in 1538.

Still, King Henry had no son, but his proven ability to have children with other women estranged him further from his wife. He limited much of her political power and denied her ownership of the Château of Chenonceau to his other lover Diane de Poitiers.

Meanwhile, Catherine was trying everything she could to give her husband a son and finally did so in 1544 who would become King Francis II. After that, Catherine never again had difficulty giving birth and with the King had another eight children. Love never returned to the marriage, but her legacy would be secure.

The death of King Henry II in 1559 proved to be the turning point in the life of Catherine de' Medici. The quiet woman who accepted her husband's attention to other women rose up with a vengeance, guiding the rule of three of her sons. For the Queen it was a hundred eighty-degree turn, going from virtually no political power allotted to her under her husband's rule to the most powerful woman (one could argue even more powerful than her sons) of the mid-1500s. Perhaps years of enduring quiet humiliation and oppression finally erupted in a ruthless outburst of power culminating in the St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre of August 23, 1572 in which Huguenots were slaughtered in mass throughout Paris.

It didn't begin this way, however. During the reign of her son Francis II, Catherine de' Medici took on a 'live and let live' approach toward the Huguenots, preferring to strike pacts and agreements with Protestant darlings such as Antoine de Bourbon.

By the time her son Charles IX took the throne in 1560, following the death of Francis, the situation had become far more intense and the Huguenots were poised for an uprising. In September of 1567, Huguenot forces attempted to overthrow the 17-year-old King Charles and launched France into a civil war. With this act, Catherine lost any sense of mercy or even reasonability she may have had toward the Huguenots and declared them a threat to the country.

She may have found validation in her declaration on the 21st of August when Admiral Coligny, a celebrated French Protestant nobleman was shot and wounded in the arm by an unknown assailant. Fearing a violent response to the attempt on the Admiral, the response came two days later from King Charles IX. Most historians agree that his mother played a contributing role to what would become known as the St. Bartholomew's Day Massacre. It was an attack of persecution which lasted until September of that year. The goal was to annihilate the Protestants of France by assassinating their most powerful leaders and by the end of the massacre, around 5,000 Protestants had been murdered throughout France.

Throughout France reactions to the massacre were, not surprisingly, divisive, the Catholics seeing it as a necessary step in curbing Protestant aggression, though more moderate Catholics were still hoping for a peaceful religious reform. In other parts of Europe, the reactions were far less approving with only Philip II of Spain applauding the massacre. Holy Roman Emperor Maximilian II, England's Elizabeth I, and Ivan the Terrible were among those to voice disgust at the bloodshed.

What remains a subject of debate is the extent of Catherine de' Medici's, or even King Charles's, involvement in the attack. Many agree that King Charles acted on his own without even consulting his mother in an attempt to nip a Protestant uprising and preserve his rule. Some historians construct it entirely as an inevitable eruption of religious tension in France. Somewhat along this theory is that the Royal Family was forced into launching the massacre due to pressure from the French Catholic base.

Whatever the truth, and it is likely somewhere in the middle of all of these theories is the question of who was Catherine de' Medici. Was she a quiet woman who stood quietly in a loveless marriage watching a husband she could never please build his legacy around her or a viper waiting in the grass to strike. Did she launch one of the bloodiest massacres in European history to preserve the legacy of her family and her son's throne or was she simply acting on the whim of the populace? What if the attack on Admiral Coligny never took place, would have she still opted for religious tolerance?

Perhaps the best way of understand Catherine de' Medici is in her own words, telling her daughter, "My principal aim is to have the honor of God before my eyes in all things and to preserve my authority, not for myself, but for the conservation of this kingdom and for the good of all your brothers."

Here is Catherine de' Medici in the truest form. A woman who fought desperately to give her husband a family ended up ensuring the family legacy almost on her own. To her, her family was her greatest accomplishment and she was determined to preserve its stability by any means necessary.

L'Anno Bello: A Year in Italian Folklore

Baking in the Spring

by Ally Di Censo Symynkywicz

The other day, as I was watching the Pioneer Woman prepare homemade fruit pizzas on the Food Network, an ad came on for a new show entitled Spring Baking. The commercial began with a voiceover narration asking: "So, what exactly is spring baking?", followed by images of people decorating cupcakes to resemble flowers. The question struck a chord with me because, while I am an avid baker who makes treats all year long. I particularly associate baking with the season of autumn. The cool weather and dusky nights seem appropriate for an evening spent in the honeyed glow of a kitchen, feeling the warmth radiating from the oven. Moreover, fall offers a bounty of ingredients suitable for baking, from tart apples to juicy pears to sharp, spicy ginger. However, autumn is far from my thoughts as I enjoy the beautiful springtime. Everything gets me excited, from the days when the thermometer reaches upwards of seventy degrees to the buds growing bigger and greener on the tips of tree branches. I am also getting excited for the new baking opportunities spring offers. Fresh, seasonal ingredients and inspiration from Italy make for a valuable and fun baking experience during the spring.

1) Citrus: Spring is a wonderful time to use up the last of the citrus fruits left over from winter. Moreover, citrus is a staple in Italian cooking, due to the abundant lemon and orange groves that dot the landscape of southern Italy and the islands. The zest of lemons (limone) and oranges (arancia) flavored the many Italian desserts lining the tables of bridal showers and weddings I remember all my life. From soft-baked, glazed cookies, to the waffle-like biscuits known as pizzelle. I love to use citrus in recipes like creamy lemon bars and orange-scented cakes. For Easter, I made a classic Italian ricotta pie accentuated by both lemon and orange peels. In short, citrus desserts are a great way to bid goodbye to the cold weather and welcome in spring!

2) Tropical: As the days get warmer and the summer is so near I can practically smell sunscreen and sand, my mind wanders to the flavors of the tropics. I happen to love banana bread, a trait I inherited from my father. Moist, spongy banana breads are an easy recipe to make and offer a quick, healthy breakfast or snack option. One of my other favorite desserts has to be pineapple-upside down cake. An impressive finale to any spring meal, these cakes blend the delectable taste of pineapple along with a sweet caramelized topping. Of course, on days when you feel that only an all-inclusive plethora of tropical fruits will satiate your desire for summer, try baking up a Hummingbird Cake. This recipe incorporates bananas, pineapples and coconut, finished off with a velvety cream cheese frosting! You could also take a cue from the Italians and snack on kiwifruit whenever you want a taste of the tropics. A perennially popular fruit there, Italy produces more kiwis than any other country!

3) Strawberries: Strawberries are a harbinger of spring. Whenever I see these ruby-red gems lining the produce shelves of supermarkets, I know that spring has arrived. I love baking with strawberries because of their versatility. My mother once made a strawberry and white chocolate tiramisu for my father's birthday, a summery twist on a classic Italian dessert. Strawberries are also delectable on cakes, pies, cheesecakes and quick-breads. When I went to Italy, I remained impressed at all the innovative uses for strawberries (fragole) in Italian desserts. Italians often drizzled strawberry sauces over custards known as panna cotta, or else served the strawberries in tall, elegant glasses marinated with balsamic vinegar for a savory-sweet contrast. As an essential crop of spring, do not be afraid to experiment with strawberries, as they nearly always guarantee a foolproof dessert!

4) Rhubarb: Rhubarb is my new favorite spring ingredient with which to bake. An odd, red celery-looking stalk, cooked rhubarb tastes like a cross between a strawberry and an apple. Its tartness perfectly blends with sweet desserts. I have found so many rhubarb recipes that I would like to try, ranging from strawberry-rhubarb pies to rhubarb chutneys served over lemon-ricotta pancakes — my mother and I once made this latter recipe, and we could not get enough! My favorite rhubarb recipe, however, is one for a moist rhubarb cake with a cinnamon-crumble topping that my father-in-law gave me. I prepare this cake for my May Day celebrations now.

Baking in the springtime is a wonderful experience. Using seasonal ingredients connects us to Mother Earth, which is now blossoming with new life. Sweet desserts made with citrus, tropical fruits, strawberries and rhubarb can serve as lovely finishes to picnics and open-air dinners spent luxuriating in the beautiful spring weather and in the company of nature. Moreover, spring baking offers us the opportunity to engage in the recipes of our Italian ancestors, honoring the food of our heritage and applying our own innovation and creativity to it. So this spring, head to the market and pick up the freshest ingredients available...and from there, happy baking!

THINKING OUT LOUD

by Sal Giarratani

Terror Camp at Our Border?

Mexican authorities say "no way" Jose and U.S. Homeland Security reportedly says these reports of an ISIS training camp are "unsubstantiated."

Judicial Watch reports that two Mexican officials have anonymously told them that there is an ISIS training camp outside Juarez, a region just eight miles from the U.S. border of El Paso, Texas, in an area called Anapra. All this underlines that our border is still ungarded.

No one yet has produced photos of the alleged camps, but there have been reports in the media concerning Mexican authorities recovering "plans" for Fort Bliss suggesting vulnerability for this military base.

Liberals and moon-bat types think the Judicial Watch folks are playing politics for reporting the camp. However, which side is politicized, the ones that pretend there is nothing to see or Judicial Watch which has been investigating this issue further?

Judicial Watch reminds me of the sheriff in "Jaws" battling town politicians. He wanted the beach shutdown, town cops wanted to keep it open for the tourism industry. They didn't want to believe the truth. In the end, that sheriff was right when Jaws started taking chunks of tourists with him into the deep water.

Our borders remain quite open and porous to illegals trying to sneak in. You can practically just walk in unnoticed thanks to the mentality of the Obama crowd in charge of things today.

Welcome to the New America. Our border security has been gutted, our southern border is unsecured and all it needs is a large WELCOME sign and directions to the local welfare office. Good country America, if you don't come from here.

If ISIS terrorists are as close as a few miles from El Paso, Texas and surely plotting bad things, we need to know, don't we?

Saint Fidelis of Sigmaringen

by Bennett Molinari and Richard Molinari

Fidelis was born Mark Rey in Sigmaringen, Prussia in 1577. His father, Johannes Rey, was burhgameister. He pursued his studies at the University of Freiburg in the Breisgau, and in 1604 became tutor to Wilhelm von Stotzingen, with whom he travelled in France and Italy and became his lifelong friend. In 1611, he returned to Freiburg to take his doctorate in canon and civil law, and at once began to practice as an advocate, defending the poor. It was the open corruption which he found in the law courts that caused him to leave the legal profession and enter Religious life. He was ordained priest the following year, and immediately afterwards was received into the Order of Friars Minor of the Capuchin at Freiburg, taking the name of Fidelis.

From the beginning of his apostolic career, he was untiring in his efforts to convert heretics.

He wrote many pamphlets against Calvinism and Zwinglianism, though he would never put his name to his writings. In 1621, he was appointed to undertake a mission to the Grisons region of Switzerland, with the purpose of bringing that district back to the Catholic Faith.

Throughout the winter, Fidelis worked tirelessly and with such success that the heretic preachers were seriously alarmed and set themselves to inflame the people against him by representing his mission as political rather than religious and that he was preparing the way for an Austrian invasion.

At Easter, he returned to Feldkirch to attend a chapter of the order and settle some affairs of his community. By this time the Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith had been established in Rome, and Fidelis was chosen to lead the Congregation's mission in the Grisons. He had, however, a premonition that he would shortly be martyred, preaching a farewell sermon at Feldkirch, he said as much.

On retuning to be the region of the Grisons, he was met everywhere with the cry: "Death to the Capuchins!" On April 24th, at Grusch, he made his confession and afterwards celebrated Mass and preached. Then he set out for Sevis. At Sevis, he entered the church and began to preach, but was interrupted by a sudden riot both in and out side of the church. Several Austrian soldiers, who were guarding the doors of the church, were killed and Fidelis himself was struck. A Calvinist, who was present, offered to lead him to a secure place. Fidelis thanked the man but said his life was in the hands of God. Outside the church, he was surrounded by a crowd led by the heretic preachers who offered to save his life if he would renounce his faith. Fidelis replied: "I came to end heresy, not to embrace it", whereupon he was struck down. He was the first martyr of the Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith. His body was taken to Feldkirch and buried in the church of his order. He was beatified in 1729, and canonized in 1745. His feast is celebrated on April 24th.

was conquered by the Romans, overrun by the Goths, occupied by the Crusaders and the Turks. In about 1690, when the Venetians were besieging Athens, the Parthenon was turned into a powder magazine. A well-aimed Venetian cannonball landed in the middle of the temple and the explosion ripped the building in half, leaving it as we see it today. About 1800 A.D. Lord Elgin obtained permission from the Turkish government to draw, make plaster casts, and even to remove some of the sculptured pieces from the site. His workers removed about half of the Parthenon's 524 foot ornamental frieze, along with other sculptured work, and shipped them all back to England at a cost of about 75,000 pounds. About four years later the British Museum purchased them for 35,000 pounds, making all this sculptured work the property of Great Britain. Later Lord Elgin was denounced as dishonest and a rapacious vandal by the poet Lord Byron, a proponent of Greek independence. For more than 150 years a bitter controversy has been waged regarding Lord Elgin's authority to remove the sculptured work from Greece.

Banking products are provided by Everett Co-operative Bank, Member FDIC. Equal Housing Lender. Everett Co-operative Bank is a Massachusetts chartered bank. Loan products are subject to credit approval. Everett Co-operative Bank NABES Registry Number - 643092.

Home Equity Loan: Payment chosen must amortize over 1, 10, or 15 year term. As of March 4, 2015, a 100% Annual Percentage Rate (APR) is available for qualifying properties with a loan-to-value (LTV) of 70% or less for loans of $10,000 to $250,000. An equity loan of $75,000 with a 5 year term at a 100% APR results in 60 monthly payments of $1,386.23 for 2nd lien. An equity loan of $75,000 with a 10 year term at a 100% APR results in 120 monthly payments of $892.91 for 2nd lien. The payment examples provided do not include taxes and insurance and the actual payment obligation may be greater. The interest rates and APRs shown above are subject to change without notice. Minimum loan amount is $10,000 and maximum loan amount is $250,000. *APR will be added to the APR for an approved bank policy exception. Everett Co-operative Bank loan must be in second position for these loan terms. If loan is in first position, borrower may be responsible for additional closing costs including pre-paid taxes, title search, title insurance, etc. Estimated closing costs range from $175 - $1,350. Allow rates are for second lien on 1-4 family owner occupied residences and qualified second homes only. APR will be added to the above rates for second lien on 1-4 family investment properties (non-owner occupied). Homeowner's insurance is required. Flood insurance may be required. Your APR will vary based on your loan term amount and actual finance charges. Contact your loan advisor about deductibility. Offer is subject to change without notice. To close the APR shown above, an Everett Co-operative Bank checking account is required. APR is increased 20% if payments are not automatically deducted from an Everett Co-operative Bank checking account.

Home Equity Line: 25 year line of credit with a 10 year interest only draw period, followed by a 15 year principal and interest repayment period. Annual Percentage Rate (APR) as of March 4, 2015 is variable, the index is the highest prime rate as published in the "Money Rates" table of "The Wall Street Journal" as of the first business day of the calendar month and is floating during the life of the loan. The maximum APR will never exceed 10.00%. The margins are as follows: For a line secured by a 1-4 family owner occupied property is +0.00%, for a line secured by a 1-4 family investment property (non-owner occupied) is +1.00%. If you cancel or terminate your line of credit within the first 24 months of the date of the Note, you will be assessed a termination/prepayment fee equaling 1% of the total line of credit or 1% of the total amount prepaid, whichever is less. Loan approval is subject to underwriting criteria and subject to credit approval. Other restrictions may apply. Homeowner's insurance is required. Flood insurance may be required. Offer subject to change without notice. Interest may be tax deductible. Check with your tax advisor.

The Authority is implementing this project in accordance with MGL Chapter 149A, Sections 1 thru 13. This selection of trade contractors conforms to MGL Chapter 149A, Section 8, sub-sections (b) to (k) inclusive. This Request for Qualifications (RFQ) will be utilized to prequalify trade contractors capable and experienced in the construction of parking garages and terminal buildings. The Authority shall utilize a two-step process including the prequalification of trade contractors based on an evaluation of the Statement of Qualifications received in response to this solicitation, followed by an Invitation to Bidders that will only be issued to the prequalified trade contractors. A Prequalification Committee consisting of four representatives, one each from the Designer and the CM at Risk and two Massport staff. This Prequalification Committee will be conducting a qualifications-based evaluation of submittals received from interested trade contractors in order to identify prequalified trade contractors who will be invited to respond to a written Invitation to Bidders. Please note that the Authority is not utilizing this process to prequalify sub-contractors who are not trade contractors which shall be done separately in accordance with MGL C149A, Section 8, sub-section (j).

Qualification Statements shall be evaluated in accordance with the following criteria; (1) Management Experience; (2) Project References including a Public Project Record and (3) Capacity to Complete including a demonstration that the contractor has the financial stability and long-term viability to successfully implement the Project. A Supplemental Information Package that discusses these Evaluation Criteria and the Prequalification Process in more detail as well as any other requirements for the Qualification Statements will be available to interested parties beginning May 7, 2015, by contacting Susan Brace at 617-568-5961 or via email at sbrace@massport.com

A Project Briefing will be held on Wednesday, May 13, 2015, at 9:00 AM in the Capital Programs Department, Logan Office Center, 2nd floor, 1 Harborside Drive, East Boston, MA. Attendance at the briefing is not mandatory, however, it is strongly encouraged in order to best familiarize your firm with the project details and the prequalification process.

Seven (7) copies of a bound document each limited to 20 sheets (40 pages), exclusive of covers and dividers and resumes which shall be limited to one page, shall be printed on both sides of the sheet (8 1/2" x 11") and shall be addressed to Mr. Houssam H. Mrs. Murphy . . . As I See It

So sorry to hear of Colm Bohill's sudden passing. He was a member of the Independent Newspaper. Colm was the nicest human being anyone would want to know. Always congenial and upbeat, with a warm smile for everyone. His strong presence at the Independent Newspaper's Revere office will be sadly missed . . . It would really make a difference if campaign committees to elect candidates for state representative would remove signs of their candidate off buildings and houses. The election is over! . . . Cities and towns are angry and disappointed in President Barack Obama's decision to cut back on federal money for snow removal. Al la Prez shorted cities and towns including Revere, Chelsea and Boston potentially $20 million. Don't expect the potholes, especially in Chelsea (where you can see pieces of blown tires on the side of the roads) be filled any time soon. A la Prez needs the money to fund his campaign trips across the country for liberal looney Dems, and vacations! . . . They're describing Liana LaMattina as "Manager of the Year" after she guided the young and personable new State Representative Adrian Madaro to a stunning victory. Could Liana have her own political aspirations for the future? She certainly has the potential and grace of a rising young star in politics. Liana is the daughter of Sal and Lisa LaMattina . . . Congratulations to Mary Berninger, and Karen Buttiglieri, both East Boston activists for many, many years. Their appointment to serve on the Massachusetts Advisory Board by Mayor Marty Walsh should come as no surprise to anyone. Both are well versed on important Eastie issues . . . Trial jurors of convicted marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev were barred from the Boston Marathon yesterday because of the creep's upcoming sentencing. There's a lot of mixed emotion and public opinion regarding the "Devil in Disguise" sentence. Many people want the death penalty, and don't want taxpayer's money spent to keep him alive, while there are a few that want the creep to rot in jail. However, victims of this horrific crime will never get closure unless this Devil is put to death, fearing he may be allowed to marry, incite religious riots among pleasures some day . . . Aaron Hernandez guilty verdict doesn't have everyone convinced. What about the two men present at Oden Lloyd's death? The Prosecution never went after those two men! If we were to compare this case to the O.J. Simpson case, where there was far more compelling evidence that Simpson perpetrated the crime and walked.

The Hernandez case falls short of evidence, and pales against evidence found in the O.J. Simpson case. In the Hernandez case, no gun and no witness to the crime were presented!!! . . . A lot of hoopla against police conduct! Yet, in almost every case shown on television and in the newspapers, it appears the victims were defying police, and police had to make a decision to protect the public, and themselves! This country is going soft on crime, and the day will come when police officers will turn the other cheek not to be accused of racial profiling, racial discrimination and stereotyping. Is this what the public wants??? Even liberal commentators on CNN admitted suspects need to comply with police orders, regardless of race, color or religion . . . Speaking of customs and traditions. Many people are complaining about being around Burka wearers in public places. It's impossible to identify anyone with just the white of their eyes showing! Who knows what gender lies underneath all that clothing and covered face!!! There's a time and place to cover up! Perhaps places of worship, private parties and events, not where there are masses of people gathered. If a person can't be identified, then they don't belong in public! Only in America! . . . Till next time!

Freeway Says ...

You can email your questions to postgazette@aol.com to the attention of Freeway. Don't forget folks, Freeway is not a vet, so please keep the questions light-hearted! Thanks.

Pooches Bring Health and Happiness

They are known to reduce stress and make us generally happier. Pet owners live long, healthy, happy lives. Whether our pooches are big and sloppy, tiny and skittish, noble or ornery, shy or zealous, they carve out a huge place in our lives. Studies suggest that pet owners' blood pressure, cholesterol and even triglyceride levels are generally lower than those of people who do not own pets. Pet owners in general are less likely to need to visit a doctor or take medications. What is it about pets that make our lives so much better? Perhaps it's in their ability to bring us balance and a level of intimacy we may not otherwise have. Balance, yes. If you are a terribly driven person, who would otherwise be a confirmed couch potato, your dog or cat is probably getting you off the couch and on your feet. Your pet invitation to play is hard to resist. Your dog may enthusiastically request a walk, or at least to go outside. If you are over-scheduled and too busy to breathe, when your dog asks to be petted and loved, it will cause you to take a moment to slow down and enjoy life as often as possible. If you are extremely neat and tidy, your pet will teach you that having an immaculate house may not be as important (or obtainable) as you once thought. If you are shy, your pet will help you to meet people and talk to them. If you are used to caring only for yourself, your pet will show you how fulfilling it is to care for someone else. If you tend to feel useless or worthless, your pet will show you how important you are. If you tend to believe you are king or queen of the universe, your pet will bring you the humility you need to come back down to earth, usually as you clean up after him or her. Intimacy? Definitely. We are able to have a relationship with our pets that is nearly impossible with other humans. We can talk to them anytime, about anything. We can just be with them, stroking their fur, communicating our feelings, in our own way, with or without words. Our pets understand our moods, comfort our sorrows, and never judge us. And unlike our human friends, our pets never outgrow us, never tire of us, and never disappoint us. No matter how badly you feel about yourself, your pet always thinks you are the best thing on two legs, and is always thrilled to see you. What can make your life better than that?

That's all for now.

Life is loving and enjoying your pet!

Former Gov. Deval Patrick will be going to work for Bain Capital made me laugh. During the Patrick years up types for bad-mouthing government. But if public trust in government is sinking into a political sewer, this may have something to do with folks inside the Beltway getting filthy rich, not by making a good product or service, but by cashing in on political connections.

More and More I Like ...

More and more I like NJ Gov. Chris Christie as a presidential candidate. He might not be really strong in a number of primary fights as folks like Cruz or Paul, but Christie has the capacity to expand his voter reach when it comes to a general election. He isn’t a perfect conservative by any stretch of the imagination, but he can attract voters from the vast moderate middle and enough economic conservatives to pull it off. I see the name Bush like I view the third rail or radioactive material. We have had enough of both the Bushs’ and Clintons.

On social issues, I am more like Cruz and on tax policy, more like Rand Paul, but I don’t see either of them cracking into the vast middle where elections are both won and lost.

America Forgets Lincoln

Recently, on April 14th, America should have remembered the day as the 150th anniversary of the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln, but the day went by with this historic event going unnoticed. Kudos to the NY Post for being the only newspaper

I saw that didn’t forget what happened on April 14, 1865.

As a letter writer named Larry Penner opined in the Metro, “No wonder many have no sense of history of our great nation.”

A Petition has been filed by Eileen M. Nortrup of Stoneham, MA requesting that the Court enter a formal Decree and Order of testacy and for such other relief as requested in the Petition. And also requesting that Eileen M. Nortrup of Stoneham, MA be appointed as Personal Representative(s) of said estate to serve Without Surety on the bond.

You have the right to obtain a copy of the Petition from the Petitioner or at the Court. You have a right to object to this proceeding. To do so, you or your attorney must file a written appearance and objection at this Court before 10:00 a.m. on May 15, 2015.

This is NOT a hearing date, but a deadline by which you must file a written appearance and objection if you object to this proceeding. If you fail to file a timely written appearance and objection followed by an Affidavit of Objections within thirty (30) days of the return date, action may be taken without further notice to you.

The estate is being administered under formal procedure by the Personal Representative under the Massachusetts Uniform Probate Code without supervision by the Court. Inventory and accounts are not required to be filed with the Court, but recipients are entitled to notice regarding the administration from the Personal Representative and can petition the Court in any matter relating to the estate, including distribution of assets and expenses of administration.

WITNESS, HON. EDWARD F. DONNELLY, JR.,
First Justice of this Court.

Ray Barron's 11 O'CLOCK NEWS

In many developing countries, poor hygiene and sanitation can be a death sentence. That fact led Sales Exec Shawn Seipier to quit his job seven years ago to launch Clean the World, a charity dedicated to collecting and recycling leftover hotel soap for those in need. His company has since partnered with Global Soap, and together the two groups have delivered more than 25 million bars to 99 countries. "One of the most effective ways to prevent many deaths is actually just hand washing with soap," said Global Soap Director Sam Stephens. "We're hoping to make a difference."

The first Democrat to announce a 2016 run, Hillary Clinton polls more than 40 points above other potential contenders from her party, such as former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley. She also has higher approval ratings than all her likely Republican opponents, who denounced her candidacy. Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker said Clinton had "the same Washington-knows-best mentality people around the country are looking to move beyond."

"Hillary Clinton is probably going to win the election," said Jonathan Chait in Nymag.com. Presidential contests bring out lots of young, black, Hispanics, and poor voters, who lean Democratic. And while Hillary can't offer anything new, she will still be "the candidate of the only major American political party not run by lunatics." Her opponent, whoever he turns out to be, will be forced to deny climate change and embrace proposals to cut benefits for the poor and elderly while giving huge tax cuts to the rich.

Wow! More than 4 million pets are euthanized in the U.S. every year, mostly because of overcrowding in shelters. But a growing number of kindhearted pilots have been donating their time, fuel and aircraft to transporting unwanted rescue dogs to less overburdened shelters, where many of them are quickly adopted. Groups like Wings of Rescue and Pilots N Paws have helped tens of thousands of strays find new homes over the past several years, and the number of volunteer aviators continues to rise. "We get a lot of the glory," said pilot Angela Garcia. "But in reality, it's just pure fun."

Huh? A speaker at the National Rifle Association's annual meeting warned attendees to arm themselves against the Islamic extremists who, he claimed, have seized control of cities across the U.S. Author Steve Tarani said sharia law and "no-go-zones" are now being established in various cities. "I have seen it with my own eyes," Tarani said. He also stated that terrorists are now streaming across the country's "porous borders."

Good idea! Going Italian! The International Space Station was outfitted with an Italian-made espresso machine to give crew members a break from instant coffee. "It's just to boost spirits," said a NASA spokesman.

Bella Culo of Chestnut Hill thinks the crew should be fed Baccala. "This will keep them alert!"

Moron! Lying down on the job! An Alaska Airlines flight had to make an emergency landing when passengers heard banging and yelling under the cabin floor. After the plane landed, an embarrassed baggage handler emerged from the cargo hold, saying he had fallen asleep there before takeoff.

Stupid idea! An Ohio woman was charged with child endangerment for dangling her 2-year-old over the cheetah pen at the Cleveland Zoo — and accidentally dropping him. The boy was quickly rescued.

Congratulations! Danielle Busby of Houston gave birth to the first set of all-female quintuplets in U.S. history.

Gwyneth Paltrow has once again found herself the source of widespread mockery. This time, for accepting a challenge to survive for a week on $29 of groceries to raise awareness for poor families living on food stamps. Several social media scathingly pointed out that the money spent on many products on Paltrow's luxury-lifestyle website, Goop, could feed a poor family for a year. Others tore into Paltrow's $29 grocery basket, which contained a number of elitist purchases. "If ur trying to buy all ur groceries for $29 u don't buy 7 limes and 2 different kinds of lettuce and avocado." tweeted one.

Wedding bells! Barry Manilow quietly married his long-time manager, Garry Kief last year, but has kept the nuptials secret for fear of alienating fans. The private wedding ceremony took place at the 71-year-old's Palm Springs mansion, in front of an audience of 30 guests who thought they'd just been invited over for lunch. Manilow's 30-year relationship with Kief, 66 has been an open secret in the music business, though the perm-tanned crooner has never publicly discussed his sexuality, worrying how the older women who love his music would react. Indeed, some of his fans were left inconsolable by the news of the wedding. "My Mum can't stop crying about Barry," posted one woman on Twitter.

What is the U.S. prison population? Well, it's higher than any country in the world, including China and Russia's.

When Christine Royles of Portland, Maine, learned that she needed a kidney transplant, the 23-year-old got creative, putting a sign on the back of her car asking strangers to consider donating. When Josh Dall-Leighton saw the sign in a local mall's parking lot, he told his wife, "I have to try." Remarkably, the 30-year-old proved a match, and the lifesaving surgery is scheduled for May. "If someone needs help, you do whatever you can to help them," Daall-Leighton said. "I have three kids of my own. I want {them} to know these aren't just words."

On this date: In 1895 U.S. sailor Joshua Slocum set sail from Boston to sail single-handed around the world; the voyage took just over three years. On this date, April 24, in 1942, the U.S. film actress and singer Barbra Streisand came into this world. Happy birthday! And on this date, in 1974, Bud Abbott, straight man in the U.S. comic team Abbott and Costello passed away.

Let it be known, the era of the Middle Ages has been referred to as "1,000 years without a bath." Bathing was rare in Europe at that time, largely because the Christian Church considered it a sin to expose the body, even to oneself. It was not until 1641 that soap was manufactured in England. Religion had become less oppressive, but government harassment in the form of restrictions and taxes on the soap-making industry caused the soap business to develop slowly.

Ah, 1927! It was the year Sacco and Vanzetti, admitted anarchists, are executed for a crime they did not commit. Riots and fighting broke out worldwide with 20 people dying in one Paris street fight. And one more time! In 1962, President John F. Kennedy speaks before a Columbus Day audience and claims his grandfather John Fitzgerald, mayor of Boston stated the Fitzgerald's descended from the Geraldini family in Venice.

Show biz quickies by the noted musicologist Albert Natale. Marilyn Monroe had this fantasy of having a child by Albert Einstein. Marilyn converted to Judaism. She believed between her and Einstein, they could have the perfect child — one with her looks and his brain. By another token, what if they had a child and it had Einstein's looks and Marilyn's brain? This was stated by Otto Preminger. From the mouth of Vittorio Gassman: "Shelley Winters has a fondness for Italian men. She married me and Anthony Franciosa. But she doesn't like Italy enough, and to me it was more important to be at home in Italy than to be in America with her. Mamma Italia comes first" And this is what Cary Grant once had to say about Mae West. "Mae West doesn't live in the real world. She has so many illusions, we have to be very careful what we say when we're around her now."

Proprio Stronzo claims he saw Barbra D'Amico and Christina Quinlan running in the Marathon Race. We will be checking this out.

AMERICA IS A BEAUFUL ITALIAN NAME

Parla Come Mangi! (Speak as You Eat!)

by Alessandra Sambiase

Benvenuti! Let's end our visit to Piemonte with a remarkable dessert savoirdi. The house of Savoy, royal dynasty that ruled the Kingdom of Italy from 1861 till the end of WWII, gets its name from the Savoy region, the Alpine area between France and Italy. Fine cakes and pastries were loved in Casa Savoia (House of Savoy) and the first savoirdi recipe was in fact created by one of their pastry chefs in year 1348. Savoirdi, delicious sponge fingers, are a specialty of Piemonte but are also made in other French regions which were once part of the Savoy region.

SAVOIARDI (Ladyfingers)

3 eggs	Pinch of salt
1/2 cups sugar	1 Tbsp butter
1/2 cup all-purpose flour	1/4 cup powdered sugar

Preparation: separate the eggs. In a bowl, beat the yolks with 1/3 cup sugar until frothy. Gradually add 1/3 cup flour, a pinch of salt and mix. In another bowl beat the egg whites until stiff and carefully fold into the egg yolk mixture. Grease a baking sheet with butter and dust with flour. Fill the mixture into a piping-bag with a smooth flat nozzle about 1/2 inch wide. Pipe fingers about 4 inches long leaving enough room in between. Mix the powdered sugar with the remaining sugar and sprinkle half over the fingers. Wait about 10 minutes, until the sugar has soaked in, then sprinkle on the remaining sugar mixture and let stand for a few more minutes. Bake the fingers until golden yellow in a pre-heated 300°F oven (10-15 minutes). Remove the tray from the oven, carefully transfer the sponge fingers to a wire tray using a spatula and allow to cool. Buon appetito!

SAVOIARDI

3 uova	Un pizzico di sale
100 g di zucchero	1 cucchiaino di burro
100 g di farina	30 g di zucchero a velo

Preparazione: separa le uova dagli albumi. In una terrina, monta i tuorli con 60 g di zucchero fino a renderli spumosi. Gradatamente aggiungi 60 g di farina, un pizzico di sale e mescola bene. In un'altra terrina, monta gli albumi a neve fermissima e facendo attenzione incorporaci bene i tuorli montati. Ungi una teglia da forno con il burro e spolverizza con della farina. Riempi con il composto una tasca da pasticceria con bocchetta piatta e liscia del diametro di poco piu' di 1 cm. Forma delle strisce lunghe 10 cm, ben distanziate fra loro. Mescola lo zucchero a velo con il restante zucchero e cospargine meta' sui savoirdi. Aspetta circa 10 minuti per fare assorbire lo zucchero. Cospargi con il resto dello zucchero e lascia riposare per qualche minuto. Inforna in forno preriscaldato a 300 °F fino ad ottenere un colorito giallo-oro (10-15 minuti). Sforna e, aiutandoti con una spatola, trasferisci i savoirdi su una griglia di raffreddamento facendo attenzione a non romperli. Buon appetito!

children, requiring defibrilators in public schools, and strengthening the experience requirements for young drivers. She plans to focus her efforts as Lieutenant Governor on topics such as homelessness, domestic violence, and empowering women.

The public servants and scholarship recipients honored during this event are shining examples of the hard work and achievements characteristic of the Italian American community. We hope that we can provide a unique opportunity for the recognized students to witness and celebrate the successes of accomplished professionals, and for the Law and Justice awardees to meet and inspire the best of the younger generation. For the attendees and their families, this event will be the most impressive that the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts has to offer, and will encourage future participation in the Sons of Italy.

Nanna & Babbononno

by John Christoforo

A Nostalgic Remembrance

Mom had told me that Babbononno loved dogs. By the time I came along, the only pet I remember was Tippi the cat, which was Nanna's pet. When my mother and her brothers were young, Babbononno had a dog. I believe it was a German Shepherd, but I'm not sure. The only story I remember about the dog was based on a happening when my mother and her girlfriend, Ada Giorgione, were about 15 or 16. Years later, Ada would marry Uncle Nick, but the marriage would disintegrate during WWII.

The girls were in their mid teens and Mom had asked Babbononno if she could go to the movies with Ada. It was a Sunday afternoon, and evidently there was a film showing at the Seville Theater that they desperately wanted to see. Babbononno reluctantly gave his okay, looked at his pocket watch and told Mom what time to be home. She and Ada later headed to the theater which, being a local neighborhood movie house, always had double features, usually a B level film preceded by a cartoon or short subject and followed by the main feature.

Ada and Mom arrived after the first film had begun, settled in and watched the rest of it and then saw the main feature. Seeing that this was a Sunday, the Seville ran its films continuously. Mom and Ada decided to stay and see the part of the first film they had missed. Not returning home at the time Babbononno had given to his daughter, he decided to head to the theater to retrieve her and her girlfriend. First, he attached a leash to the German Shepherd, exited the house at 70 Eutaw Street, walked with the dog to Meridian Street, headed south toward Central Square and entered the outer lobby of the Seville with the dog. In his fractured English, Babbononno told the person collecting tickets that he wanted to pick up his daughter.

The dog must have had an intimidating appearance, as my grandfather was not stopped at the entrance, nor did any usher stop him as he entered the lobby and headed for the orchestra area where he knew the girls would be sitting. Once inside, he waited until his and the dogs vision became adjusted to the dark. He then unhooked the dog from the leash, and in Italian, told the dog to find Angelina, my mother's name in Italian. The dog then wandered through the orchestra seats sniffing out the patrons who began squirming, lifting their legs and yelling about a loose dog. Finally locating the girls, the dog barked for Babbononno, who followed the sounds of his dog and found the two girls sitting together. He yelled at them and they immediately got up to leave with my grandfather. Hitching the dog up to the leash, Ada, my mother, Babbononno and the dog left the theater and headed home. They were reprimanded for not being home on time and tried to explain the circumstance, but Babbononno grounded my mother for a week in spite of Nanna trying to explain to her husband the situation as she understood it.

The dog was long gone by the time I was born, but Nanna had an orange and white cat named Tippi. Tippi was her bilingual pet. She spoke English to the cat as did Mom. Babbononno spoke only Italian to the cat, but the animal seemed to understand everything that was said. He was Nanna's cat, though. I remember, one day, Tippi brought a present home and dropped it at Nanna's feet, a mouse it had just killed. I don't ever remember my grandmother swearing at anything or anyone at any time, except this once. She started swearing and dropping Avellinese F-bombs at the cat loud enough for everyone to come running toward her location to see what was wrong.

I guess I inherited my love for animals, especially dogs from my grandparents. When we lived in East Boston, we didn't have any pets, but when we moved to Belmont, one of the first things I did was accept a puppy from a friend who had bought it, but couldn't keep it due to restrictions at her apartment building. Tammy was my dog while I lived at home, but after I was on my own, it became my father's faithful follower. When he was home, the dog never left his side. When Tammy had to be put down years later, Loretta and I inherited a Keeshond and gave it to my folks to fill the void left by the absence of a pet.

After my kids came along, a woman who taught with Loretta told us that her beagle had had pups. She asked us to take one and the kids picked one out of the litter. He was the cutest little thing with orangish, brown and white coloring like many beagles. The kids decided to name him Beagsley and he quickly became part of the family. Seeing he was now part of an Italian family, he became Beagsley Domenic Christoforo.

The backyard had to be sealed off to allow the dog to wander around without wandering away, so I put in a chain link fence which Beagsley disliked, but it was safer that way. The only problem I remember occurred one Saturday afternoon when I got a call from the dog's vet. I answered the phone and the voice on the other end said, "It's Saturday afternoon. Do you know where your dog is?" I asked who was calling and when the vet told me who she was, I explained that the dog was in the backyard. She then told me to check, and when I did, I discovered that the dog wasn't there. Somehow, he had gotten out and wandered to a Little League field near the house. He decided to join the game that was in session and someone looked at the medallion hanging from his collar. The vet's name and number were listed on the metal disc and a cell phone call to the vet prompted her to call me.

When I arrived at the field, I discovered that the dog had stationed himself at 2nd base and had actually stopped a couple of grounders. The coach told me that he was better than the kid he had playing 2nd base, but the player covering the base had to be a human, not a dog. I leashed up the dog and took him home much to his chagrin.

Beagsley loved the water. When the kids were young, we had a boat that was moored at the Medford Boat Club and whenever we headed out, Beagsley's feet were firmly planted on the front deck. He was the navigator or lookout and led the way for us.

Those were great times and he grew up with my kids, John and Michael. For some reason, whenever Dean Saluti and Margie Cahn came over, Beagsley loved to jump on their laps and be lovey-dovey. They weren't too happy with this, but never really said anything to keep peace in the family.

When the boys went off to college, Beagsley became my dog and we grew older together. A few years ago, there were too many things wrong with our beagle and we had to put him down. To keep his memory alive, we use his name daily. I have his name immortalized in our email address. In the future, if any of you would like to get in touch, you can email me at beagsley@rcn.com. Son John and his wife, Beth, have a golden retriever who rings a bell when it has to go out. Now, that's a smart dog.

Folley jabs Ali's body.

Covington, originally believed that the course of appeals would take at least a year, but his appeal on the grounds that Ali was a Muslim minister and conscientious objector had been refused. Covington's latest maneuver — the suit against the draft board contending there is a lack of Negro representation and therefore existing prejudice — is no more than a delaying action. Covington believed he would win in the courts on the question of Ali's minister-objector claim, but this would come only after he reports for induction, which could be in May in Houston. No one was sure he would report. If he failed to do so, he would go to jail and Covington would get him out on bond until the issue was decided.

Whatever the outcome, Ali was a gifted champion. Yet polemics and debate surrounded each of his fights, and the judgments, usually discrediting, were frequently colored by personal distaste. Even among boxing people, who accept any behavior short of having their wallets lifted, Ali is anathema, and they, like much of the press, couch their prejudices with tiresome criticisms: Ali can't punch, Ali can't take a punch, and, anyway, everyone he fights is just a pug who would be knocked down by a spring wind.

Fight people just refused to accept him, and he seemed to know it when he spoke at boxing's annual testimonial to itself several days before the fight.

Only a few remained on the dais and their heads, attached to broken noses and long cigars, hung down or to the sides, the eyes occasionally rolling at the intense verbal bombast and idiocy strafing the room. The dinner, it was obvious, had quickly become the party scene in Little Caesar, the one where Rico is given a gold watch for his banditry and sparkling handiwork with a chopper. But the star of this show had left, taking with him only the night and leaving behind the one provocative line of the evening: "After I go," said Muhammad Ali, "boxing will go to the graveyard."

Will Swift, despite his hurt, could believe that. When will boxing?

taken, as TPA is effectively, a closed rule, and if the Senate can operate under a closed rule in the case of TPA, it can find a way to use a closed rule without TPA. Which brings us to one of Trumbull's maxims, "At any given time, the rules are what the majority says the rules are."

The U.S.-Jordan FTA was implemented in 2001, though not under TPA. It was passed by a voice vote in the House followed by a voice vote in the Senate.

Is Fast Track or TPA Constitutional?

A federal appeals court held in 2001 that the issue of whether the NAFTA should have been approved as a treaty was a non-justiciable political question (Made in the USA Found. v. United States, 242 F.3d 1300 (11th Cir. 2001)). The U.S. Supreme Court denied review in the case. In other words, if you think Congress violates the Constitution by treating FTAs as Congressional-Executive Agreements rather than as treaties, the only remedy is to elect a Congress that won't do that. But that won't happen because the people who object to fast track, progressive and TEA Party members will never work together to elect any one.

As early as 1890, Congress delegated tariff bargaining authority to the President and authorized him to suspend existing duty-free treatment on particular items by proclamation. The Supreme Court subsequently held that the authorizing statute, § 3 of the Tariff Act of 1890, 26 Stat. 612, did not unconstitutionally delegate either legislative or treaty-making authority to the President.

1948 Boston Yanks.

In 1944, eight years after the Redskins moved out of Boston for our nation's capital, an expansion team was awarded to Ted Collins with the stipulation from the NFL that his team call Boston home. Collins, a show business manager famous for his relationship with Kate Smith of "God Bless America" fame, initially wanted his team to call New York City home and play at the original Yankee Stadium. Although this dream of playing at the stadium would go unfulfilled until 1945 (more on this later), he still named his franchise the Yanks.

Calling Fenway Park home and led by Head Coach Herb Kopf, the Boston Yanks mustered a pathetic 2-8 record in their inaugural season. Kopf was supposed to act as a bandage while Collins waited on the legendary Jim Crowley, a member of Notre Dame's "Four Horseman" backfield, to complete his tenure at Navy. However, Crowley never came to Boston deciding instead to take the position of commissioner of the newly formed All-America Football Conference, which was to rival the NFL.

The Yanks team colors were green and gold, a tribute to the Notre Dame Fighting Irish. But neither the success of the Irish nor their namesakes ever formulated here in Boston. In their five seasons in Boston, the Yanks never had a winning record, the franchises best season coming in 1947 when it posted a 4-7-1 mark.

Due to World War II, a need for troops caused a player shortage throughout the NFL. Some teams were forced to merge squads to be able to maintain a competitive roster. In 1943, the Pittsburgh Steelers and Philadelphia Eagles joined forces in the Keystone State to form the Steagles. In 1945, the Yanks and Brooklyn Tigers merged for a pitiful 3-6-1 record. That season the team played the majority of its' home games at Fenway Park, but Collins would see his dream realized when his Yanks played the New York Giants to a 13-all draw in what was considered a home game at Yankee Stadium.

During its time in Boston the team featured Italian-American players such as Quarterback Paul Governali, Duke Abbruzzi and Medford, Massachusetts native Gary Famiglietti.

Following five below .500 seasons, Collins petitioned the NFL to move the franchise to New York City. Instead of a straight relocation, Collins also wanted to officially fold the Yanks so that he could claim a tax write off. In 1949, the Yanks had become the Bulldogs and by 1950, Collins dream was finally fulfilled when he renamed the franchise the New York Yanks. The Yanks would leave New York for Dallas in 1952, becoming the Texans for one season. From there the franchise was sold to new ownership based out of Baltimore, finally achieving both success and stability as the Colts.

It would not be until 1959, when the American Football League awarded William "Billy" Sullivan a franchise that Boston got another chance at pro football.

Team ownership was the primary reason that professional football never caught on in Boston as the Bulldogs, Braves/Redskins or Yanks ever had stability at the ownership level. In fact, if it hadn't been for Sullivan's determination, the Boston Patriots may have never made it out of its formative years. Sullivan lost money to keep his franchise in Boston, never looking to leave the city he loved. For Sullivan it was Boston or bust. Unfortunately for Sullivan, his on field product has secured him an undeserved contemptuous legacy in Boston sports history.

Chewing Tobacco
a Bad Pastime

Baseball has begun again and I am sure that many players — fewer than in the past — but still too many are stuffing their mouths with chewing tobacco and looking like chipmunks. spitting all over the place too. It looks pretty ugly and always did. Major League Baseball is banning the product, but the Players Association is a no go on the idea, due apparently from player pressure.

I read a great piece in the Wall Street Journal by Larry Thornberry in which among other things he said, “I never understood the charm of chewing tobacco, the slobbering, the expectorating, the unspeakable spit cups.” Nowadays, many players and coaches are chewing more and more gum, or like Tito Francona who stuffs his mouth with bird seeds and then starts spitting them out all over the place. All these habits seem disgusting, but chewing tobacco can cause mouth cancer. Last year, Tony Gwynn died at age 53 of throat cancer and Curt Schilling is currently in remission with the same issue.

Growing up in the '50s and '60s, I can remember Bill Tuttle and especially Nellie Fox from the White Sox chewing all the time. They both looked like they had a couple of baseballs inside their mouths.

Fox actually was a spokesperson for a chewing tobacco company in which he recommended the brand to fans as his favorite stuff.

I never quite understood the desire to stuff and spit all the time while playing ball. Must have been a seemingly deadly and nasty habit, hard to give up.

Buchholz Doing it Again

His first start on Opening Day of 2015 was a gem. Then, it was followed by a horrible second start where he became only the fourth pitcher in Red Sox history to allow at least ten runs without pitching into the fourth inning. Also, his first inning was a nightmare giving up seven runs. Farrell tried to put a great spin on his performance when he stated, “At times he looked to pitch a little too fine. I know he warmed up sharp.” Yeah, right.

This has always been Clay's problem. You never know which Clay you are going to get. But quickly you find out and often it isn't the right Clay.

Boxing Ringside

WITH BOBBY FRANKLIN

After Muhammad, a Graveyard

The heavyweight champion won an interesting fight against an aging, but surprisingly worthy challenger. Now Ali's clouded future raises the possibility that the ring soon may be deprived of its most colorful figure.

— Mark Kram April 3, 1967 SI

Zora Folley does pushup.

The little sport from the West, 12 years old, whey-faced, hat on his knee, tie in place, hair slicked down, sat on the wooden bench next to the heavyweight who was now just a truck driver from Arizona. The kid's eyes were red, and he would not look at the fighter, who kept glancing out of the corners of his eyes at the son of his manager. Outside, in the dark corridor, a lightweight was howling: "Why do ya bums always fall over for that bum?" Zora Folley was not listening. He was listening to the sound of a dream dying.

"What I tell ya, what I tell ya?" the trainer, Johnny Hart, kept saying. "It was his right hand that ruined us. I warned him about Clay's right. I said double safety. Get out. Move back in a hurry when Clay gets set. Folley didn't do it. It was that simple."

The kid, Will Swift, had had enough. His face turned up at Folley, and his eyes were wet. "It's unfair," he said. "Clay cheats. That was no way for poor Zora to lose. That's not the way a prize-fight should go. Clay confused Zora, flapping his hands, dancing and just doing crazy things. Poor Zora. I hate Clay. No, I don't. I know it's wrong. Clay is a great champion."

Folley was silent. Soon he put on his long, gray overcoat. While Muhammad Ali — with the Muslim guard prancing in front of him and shouting, "Out the way, get out" — entered the Midtown Motor Inn across from the Garden, Zora Folley departed like an old, humble preacher leaving a gospel tent. He faded into the darkness of Eighth Avenue, a street of no face and no names, where already the scramblers and the ramblers, and the price to get inside, were yowling that one Zora Folley was just another stiff for a bigmouth draft dodger.

Some critics came at you with the same pitch the next day, but the fact is — unless one was looking at Ursula Andress all night — Folley had nothing to apologize for.

Even his "heart," which was quite suspect before the bout, stood up. He made the best fight he could, and it stands as one of the more interesting fights Ali has had. Age (he's 34 and had been in 85 bouts) and caution — his reluctance to vary, even slightly, the style that had given him 40 knockouts — beat Folley. He was also beaten by a patient, disciplined and "scientific" performance, which Ali had promised Folley just because he was such a "civilized, respectable" man.

Still, Folley did accomplish some things. He cut the ring down on Ali. He hit the champion more often than any other opponent with solid right hands and slip jabs. He did not panic when Ali got cute. Faking and feinting, he forced Ali to miss several good punches. On the negative side — besides being knocked out — he obstinately clung to one stratagem; while moving to his right, he kept looking to throw a right-hand counter. It did not take Ali long to learn that he could go in flat-footed and ram home his good right hand, which so many people doubt he possesses.

It is also a popular opinion that Ali just played with Folley the first two rounds, but it is more likely that he was measuring Folley's reactions and the strength of his punches. It wasn't until the third round that Ali began working. His straight left hands — not his jab — kept snapping Folley's head back. These were the punches that started Folley on his way out. At the end of the third round, Ali told his corner that Folley had begun to tire, that his punches had lost some of their life.

In the fourth, Ali, now punching flat-footed, spun Folley around with a left hook and then banged a right hand in back of his ear. Folley went down; he was flat on his stomach, and then suddenly he was up, his nose streaming blood, he was kneeling and looking to his corner for the count. Folley raged back, but he had left too much of himself on the floor. Ali, it appeared, carried Folley in the fifth and sixth rounds, but going into the seventh Herbert Muhammad, Ali's manager, told him to "stop playin'." He did. Two rights, the first of which traveled roughly six inches, gave Ali his 29th straight victory and his ninth successful title defense, and sent Folley back to the anonymity in which he has long labored — and seemed to prefer.

Back on his feet and alert, Folley began looking for his son Junior. The boy was brought into the ring, and he looked at his father and then he glanced down at his shoes.

"Come over here!" Ali ordered the boy. "Don't be ashamed. I know you are disappointed, but your father put up a good fight. He's a good fighter, a slick, scientific boxer, and if we'd met 10 years ago things might have been different."

Ali, indeed, had been exceptionally decent to Folley, so much so that the fight lacked character. Each of his fights, of course, always seemed to present Ali as a brilliant musician and his opponent as a mere instrument for his will and artistry, but each has always had a distinct current running through it. Ernie Terrell was the self-seeking Uncle Tom. In the European fights, Ali was the noble, misunderstood black prince in exile. Against Cleveland Williams, he was the old, uncomplicated colored boy from Louisville, full of fun and quiet charm. For Folley, who had no desire to engage in blather or even mock animus, Ali was just a fighter. The gate was plainly in danger, until the draft board requested Ali to appear for induction on April 11. That same day he began to create the character dramatization that rescued the box office.

"This may be the last chance," he said, "to see Muhammad Ali in living color, so if you have always been wanting to see me, you'd better come to the Garden." Later he said: "Perhaps in one to three years I will fight again." The "one to three" seemed to indicate he would choose a jail sentence to military service. He would not disclose his decision, but his hints were cleverly camouflaged. "My life, my death, all my sacrifices," said Ali, who had a curious bent toward martyrdom, "are for Allah. I am the tool of Allah and because of my sacrifice it will come out that hundreds of Muslims are in jail rather than fight in the Army. Or even just to go into the service."

It was likely that Ali would not fight in the near future; already, in an effort not to antagonize the government, he canceled his May 27th fight with Oscar Bonavena in Tokyo. His lawyer, Hayden

HOOPS and HOCKEY in the HUB

by Richard Preiss

As the NHL Stanley Cup playoffs proceed without the Bruins, one might think that things have been finalized for the immediate future on Causeway Street. But such is not the case.

In fact, things are more uncertain and up in the air now than when the Bruins played their last home game back on April 4th. For now, the Bruins are without a general manager and they may be without a coach come later in the spring.

When Bruins President Cam Neely and Delaware North Boston Holdings CEO Charlie Jacobs let GM Peter Chiarelli go, they didn't do the same for Head Coach Claude Julien — who has several years remaining on a contract extension.

Rather, they indicated that Chiarelli's successor, whoever he might be, will make that call on who will coach the Bruins for the 2015-2016 season.

"It hasn't fully been made," said Neely during a press conference with reference to whether a decision had been rendered concerning Julien. "We met with Claude, Charlie and I, and we told him that we really believe that once we go through the exhaustive search to find the next general manager that we will leave it up to that GM to decide what he wants to do with our coaching staff. Claude certainly understood that, but that's where we left it."

Right now, that's a non-decision that's not fair to Julien. It might sound a bit odd, but Chiarelli is now actually in a better position than Julien. That's because the decision has been made regarding him and now he's free to become a candidate for other openings as they become available.

We have a strong feeling that he won't be unemployed long, especially when his recent resume includes a Stanley Cup Championship (2011) and a Stanley Cup finalist (2013). Plus, he's able to be available for any GM position that becomes available. He'll have, so to speak, his pick concerning where to apply. The full range of openings will be his to consider.

Not so with Julien. First of all, let us state right here that we hope Coach Julien is back next season. The same recent resume that Chiarelli has on the GM side, Julien has on the coaching side — the Stanley Cup Championship and the Stanley Cup finalist. Those aren't exactly weak reference points.

Julien wants to come back. During their meeting with him, Neely indicated that he and Jacobs "told him the situation. We asked him (if he wanted to return) and he said 'I signed a contract to coach here. I want to coach here.' So he made that clear. We had planned to meet with him to talk about the coming season and the past season so that's our next agenda with Claude."

But knowing the B's over the years, one must actively consider the possibility that Julien might no longer be the coach of the B's in a couple of months. If that's the case, Julien could well have fewer opportunities for employment than Chiarelli since a number of the head coaching vacancies will have been filled by then. And that's just not fair to Julien, who took the B's to the championship for the first time since 1972 and nearly repeated two years later.

Ironically, the same situation played out a number of years ago when Chiarelli was hired. The Bruins dismissed GM Mike O'Connell, but kept Head Coach Mike Sullivan aboard. When Chiarelli was finally hired in June (he had been the assistant GM at Ottawa), he fired Sullivan — who had been in the same indecisive no man's land then as Julien is now.

It was getting late in the NHL coaching employment line and Mike saw several opportunities go by the boards while he waited and waited, only to be finally shown the door. Sullivan would become an assistant at Tampa Bay 11 months later.

Jacobs even made reference to the similarity.

"Having been through the process before, when we transitioned from Mike O'Connell to Peter Chiarelli, it (the fate of Sullivan) was part of the interview process. It was a question that was asked of all the candidates. But in all candor, in order to find the best candidate you have to give them the freedom to make those decisions on their own. They have to arrive at their own conclusions — without prejudice from management. That's how you allow them to fulfill their duties to the best of their abilities. So yes, it will be part of the process. We will certainly say: 'We think we have a good coach. We'd like to hear your input on it. The decision is ultimately yours, new GM.' We will be trying to find the best candidate to be our next general manager. And the decision will be his regarding the coach."

Another dynamic may well come into play. Neely described Julien and Chiarelli as being essentially on the same page. "Those two, in my opinion, have a great working relationship and have had one for a number of years." That's not surprising given that Chiarelli hired Julien. He was, after all, Chiarelli's appointment.

But the same won't be true of the next GM. Julien won't be his appointment. He will be a holdover appointed by someone else. Whether that will be enough to impede "a great working relationship" is anybody's guess. Come later this spring, we'll know the answer.
