Bolton's War Game?

I often read The Week magazine, a great weekly with stories from both American and foreign media outlets. Recently there was a cover of John Bolton playing on what looks like a board game as he's moving all kinds of toy planes on a map that includes Iran, and he's moving all those planes onto Iran. I used to like Bolton when he was appearing on Jeff Kuhner's radio show during the 2016 election, but the more I learned of him, the less I liked him.

Many liberals call him a war hawk and I have got to this point in my life where I'm not happy with this constant and permanent war status for America. It seems we have been fighting our enemies since the time of President George H.W. Bush right up to President Trump today. Have we not learned anything from Vietnam. Are we really doomed to keep fighting foes for an eternity?

On the issue of endless wars, President Trump is better off listening to his inner self than John Bolton.

Whitey Bulger Endorses Trump from the Grave?

In the final months of his life, James "Whitey" Bulger wrote letters from prison offering his thoughts on a range of subjects. His faltering health, his longtime girlfriend, his wish for a peaceful death. But there was another topic that the notorious Boston crime boss returned to again and again: President Donald Trump. In several handwritten letters shared with NBC News, Bulger expressed gushing praise for Trump, offering rave reviews of the president's foreign policy and combative relationship with the media. Has the media nothing better to do than waste time on nonsense stories?

Rain or No Rain It's the Bunker Hill Day Parade

by Sal Giarratani

The forecast for Sunday, June 16th looked interesting. It was supposed to rain later in the afternoon and be pretty cloudy in the morning. But you can never bank on the meteorologists' on the radio or TV. The streets of Charlestown were packed with folks lining the streets because in Charlestown, they hold the parade come hell or high water.

The parade turned out great from beginning to end as everyone just went into denial over the rain and enjoyed the town's celebration. Tradition doesn't cower to the weather. Only the parade matters.

This year's parade was dedicated to the memory of the late Commander Bob Gillen and also honored the 100th Anniversary of the founding of the JW Conway American Legion Post 26 which was founded on June 17, 1919.

Remember, without June 17th, there would be no July 4th!

JULIUS CAESAR

"De Bello Gallico" can probably be best translated as "From the Gallic Wars" and this expression is universally understood to identify the commentaries of Julius Caesar on those wars. They were campaigns which were conducted by Caesar from 58 B.C. to 51 B.C., and by which he conquered an area for Rome, approximately the size of France, as we know it today. The commentaries seem to be a compilation of the dispatches which were sent by Caesar to the Senate at the end of each year of operations and these in turn were prepared from the information that he received from his staff officers. Critics have considered the literary style of these dispatches to be simple, straightforward, and unadorned, with occasional touches of rhetoric. Present day reports claim that the original dispatches were presented in the form of notebooks with numbered pages and that they were published at a later date in eight short books which average out to six or seven thousand words in each book. This is the literary work which is claimed to have given Caesar a prominent position among the scholars in the Golden Age and also placed him among the world's greatest writers. Any attempt to report on the "commentaries of Caesar" at this time would be meaningless due to the lack of other background information on the Gallic Wars. I shall, instead, seize upon this opportunity to present an introduction to Julius Caesar in the next five weeks which should be interesting, even though it merely scratches the surface. I don't know any other way to do justice to the memory of the greatest Roman that the world has ever known.

July 11 & August 1

The name "Caesar" probably was derived from ancient Roman legends. Some say it came directly from the word "Caedo" meaning that the first bearer of the name was cut from his mother by Caesarean operation. Others derive the name from "Caesaries" because the first Caesar was born with a full head of hair. Still others attach the name to "Caesius" as applied to the color of the skin and eyes.

Caesar was the family name of Gaius Julius Caesar and after his death, the title of Caesar was given to many succeeding emperors. However, the term "Twelve Caesars" seems to refer specifically to Julius Caesar, Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, Nero, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Nerva, Trajan, and Hadrian.

The first six Caesars, from Julius to Nero constitute what is commonly known as the Julio-Claudian line. Readers must be reminded that Julius Caesar was a dictator but not an emperor; therefore, of the "Twelve Caesars" only eleven were emperors. It also might be of interest to note that in later years, the names Czar and Kaiser (absolute rulers) were derived from the Latin name Caesar

The Julio-Claudian line was followed by "The Flavian Emperors" who were Vespasian, Titus, and Domitian. These are the emperors who were responsible for the construction of the "Flavian Amphitheater" which we now call the "Coliseum." The next three Caesars: Nerva, Trajan, and Hadrian are part of a line of emperors which were called the "Antonines" or "The Good Emperors."

Trump's Tariffs Target China's Unfair Trade Practices

I applaud President Trump's use of tariffs in response to China's intellectual property abuse. I especially welcome the proposal to add all finished apparel and home textile furnishings to a fourth list of retaliatory tariffs. The U.S. has imposed tariffs pursuant to Section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974, which authorizes the President to take such action when a trading partner is found to have acts, policies, or practices that are unreasonable or discriminatory and that burden or restrict U.S. commerce. A seven-month-long investigation determined that China systematically engages in acts, policies or practices that are actionable under Section 301. The administration would be acting recklessly and with disregard of the facts documented in the 301 investigation if it failed to impose a trade remedy in the face of China's unfair trade practices.

What will be the effect of a 25% tariff on apparel and home textiles of Chinese origin? For the American consumer the effect will be negligible. Back-to-school shoppers will find shops and online vendors fully stocked with the articles they need, and at a price they can afford. Take for example, a pair of children's blue jeans. Currently, as imported from China, those jeans, that retail at around $20, are imported at an average cost of $4.61. A 25% tariff would add $1.15 to the importers' cost. Even if the entire increase were passed on to the consumer, that's just a 6% hike. More likely most, or all, would be absorbed at the various levels of the supply chain. That is, if the brands and retailers decide to stick with Chinese sourcing.

Cost-sensitive brands and retailers might, however, decide that the increase is unacceptable. In that case, they can source elsewhere and avoid the 25% tariff. The U.S. has free trade agreements in place with 12 nations here in the Western Hemisphere. With a 25% tariff, in addition to the general duty, Chinese-origin jeans will cost $6.53. That makes sourcing from our regional FTA partners, at an average cost of $5.66, look very attractive. Additionally, when apparel is made in our regional partners, there is a good likelihood that it will contain U.S. inputs. Any shifting of sourcing away from China into our Western Hemisphere supply chain is certain to result in more U.S. textile production and more good-paying U.S. manufacturing jobs.

It is well past the time to do something to counter against China's unfair trade practices. Year after year, since China's WTO accession in 2001, USTR has issued an annual Reports to Congress on China's WTO Compliance, and year after year, the report says the same thing — "Real progress was made, but much more work remains to be done" and "The Special 301 report again placed China on the Priority Watch List and the Out-of-Cycle Review of Notorious Markets featured Chinese markets prominently." In our approach to China's unfair trade practices we've been doing the same thing and expecting different results. That is why I appreciate this administration's willingness to try a new, and I believe productive, approach to the China problem.

I understand the difficult situation some manufacturers are in, when inputs not available from any source other than China are on a 301 retaliation list. I urge the administration to release a transparent and expeditious exclusion process that is effective and mitigates the impact on textile producers. I note that for the first two lists, which had exclusion provisions that process is moving forward and, where merited, exclusions are being granted to some U.S. manufacturers who have become collateral damage in this trade action. The fact that some inputs can be sourced only from China should itself be a concern. Years of unchecked unfair trade practices on the part of China have driven other sources out of the market entirely. These tariffs, if maintained, can lead to both more U.S. production and a diversification of our foreign sourcing.

L'Anno Bello: A Year in Italian Folklore

The Mystery and Light of a Midsummer Night

by Ally Di Censo Symynkywicz

What is it about summer nights that make me think of magic, moonbeams, and fireflies and fairies flitting about a darkened forest? Perhaps the answer lies in the velvety hue of the evening sky, offset by the delicate diamond-like stars that peek out from the late sunset. Or perhaps the answer resides in the comforting sound of crickets and cicadas humming their melody from deep within bushes and trees. It could also be that people tend to congregate outside during the warm summer twilight, illuminating the atmosphere with candles and lanterns from barbecues and alfresco dinners. I always find that the most magical of these nights occurs around the summer solstice, the longest day, and shortest night of the year. In olden times, the summer solstice was known as midsummer, which can confuse those of us who view the solstice as the beginning of summer rather than the middle. Ancient Europeans used agricultural rather than purely astronomical methods of gauging the seasons, and so the solstice was considered the height of summer rather than its commencement. As Christianity spread across the continent, Midsummer festivities became absorbed into the feast day of St. John the Baptist, creating an indelible mix of traditions. The result is one of my favorite holidays, a festival that embodies the magic and boldness of summer.

Europeans in older times began the summer on May 1st, or May Day, the holiday that marked the time to let livestock out to graze in pastures. Summer ended on Lammas, which fell on August 1st, the festival of the grain harvest and the first fruits of the autumn. As a result, the summer solstice marked the midpoint of the season and as such was called as Midsummer. In Europe, Midsummer heralded not only the longest day of the year, but also the period after which the daylight hours would slowly shorten. For this reason, I like viewing the solstice as the middle rather than the beginning of summer as well — it makes little sense to celebrate the start of summer when the sun begins to diminish in the sky! Midsummer customs later attached themselves to June never pass up an opportunity for 24th, St. John the Baptist's a festival and party accordingly Day, the feast commemorating on St. John the Baptist's Day, the birthday of the important Biblical figure six months before Christmas. In Italy, St. John's

Day customs symbolize both the decline of the sun after the solstice and the sense of magic which pervades the evening. All over the Italian countryside, gli fuochi di San Giovanni, or St. John's bonfires, blaze from the hilltops on the eve of the saint's festival. These fires both mimic the power of summer sun while also symbolically imploring the sun to stay longer in the sky. Young Italians may also spend the evening gathering herbs, which are supposedly imbued with mystical properties on this unusual and magical night. According to old superstitions, these herbs work especially well for romantic divination, and people slip them under their pillows to dream of their future spouse.

Across Europe, similar Midsummer and St. John the Baptist's Day traditions utilize the seasonal staples of water, fire, and greenery. In Scandinavia, Midsummer is one of the most significant holidays of the year, on par with Easter and Christmas. Sporting wreaths of flowers on their heads, Scandinavians celebrate this holiday by dancing around Maypoles bedecked with greenery, building bonfires near lakes and rivers, and sitting down to feasts featuring summer ingredients like strawberries and potatoes. Meanwhile, girls in Russia and Eastern Europe float flower garlands down rivers and attempt to foretell the future by interpreting the movement of the garlands. People in Spain and Portugal celebrate the Feast of St. John the Baptist with outdoor carnivals, bonfires, street fairs, and the exchange of potted herbs. Italians, of course. especially in cities of Florence and Turin, where he is the patron saint and outdoor fairs and fireworks displays mark the occasion. Out in the countryside, people may enjoy St. John's apples, or le mele di San Giovanni. A favorite of my father, these are small green apples so named because they ripen extremely early, just around the time of the solstice. No matter where one goes in Europe, charming Midsummer revelries emphasize the importance of the summer sun and the blessings of the season. The United States even boasts its own festivals full of outdoor excursions, fireworks and water — the Fourth of July, of course!

Above all, Midsummer is a holiday tinged with bittersweet nostalgia. While it honors the height of the sun's power and the carefree days of summer, it also recognizes that the hours of sunlight will slowly start to diminish once this date is past. It is a poignant reminder that nothing lasts forever. Yet, Midsummer is celebrated with joy, not sadness. Its celebrations encourage people to enjoy the longest day of the year by living life in the present moment. We know that the year is a cycle. and that we should appreciate each season for what it offers. The darkness of autumn and winter reveals celebrations of the Earth's bounty and communal feasts where families gather together in joy and goodwill against the cold. And yes, the sun will be once more reborn in a bright blaze of glory on the winter solstice, immortalized in light-themed holidays like Hanukkah and Christmas and New Year's Eve. This summer solstice, live in the moment and enjoy all that summer has to provide on the longest day of the year — and let's make a vow to carry that sunshine, optimism, and wondrous magic within us for the rest of the year.

SHAMELESS on Capitol Hill

I was appalled as I looked at the front-page of the NY Post headlined SHAMEFUL, June 12th, but not surprised. Kudos to Jon Stewart for his forceful support for the real heroes of 9-11! Stewart spoke of all the pain those heroes suffered on that infamous day and all the pain that many still endure today.

So many of the members of the sub-committee dealing with the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund, which is endangered of further funding were absent and Stewart took Congress to task for so many members, both Democrat and Republican, failing to show up to listen to the testimony of victims such as 9-11 first responder Luis Alvarez.

"Sick and dying, they brought themselves down here to speak to no one. Shameful! It's an embarrassment to the country and a stain on this institution," stated Stewart. Truer words have never spoken!

Endless terms and empty seats once again shows how much we need term limits in the House and Senate down in Washington, DC. When folks are in office too long, they forget who they are and whom they represent.

Kudos also to U.S. Rep. Jerry Nadler, who chairs the House

Puppies Deserve Better

All Dogs Deserve the Good Life — Don't Support Cruelty

There's a reason the puppy mill industry doesn't show you where their puppies come from. To turn a profit, corners need to be cut, and it's the dogs imprisoned in puppy mills to pay the price both physically and emotionally. Puppies born into this sad world are comparatively lucky in one way, because they need to be sold while they're small and young, the time they spend in these facilities is brief. Unfortunately, the effects of where and how they were bred last a lifetime. Poor genetics, early weaning, unsanitary environments, and significant stress can contribute to the development of serious health and behavioral problems that are expensive, difficult, or impossible to treat.

CONSTANT FEAR AND STRESS: Lack of normal human interaction hurts typically social animals like dogs. Dogs kept in commercial breeding facilities may pace back and forth in their CAGES, bark nonstop, cower, or appear entirely shut down. Since puppy mills only plan on selling puppies, there is little incentive to provide much physical or emotional care to the adult breeding dogs.

SET UP FOR FAILURE: Cruel breeders want to produce as many puppies as possible, as quickly as possible. Unlike responsible breeders, they don't screen for inheritable disorders and remove dogs from their breeding program that are less likely to produce healthy puppies. Even psychological issues like anxiety and fearfulness can have genetic roots. And it only makes sense that, just as with humans, an unborn baby might be affected by a mother's stress: Stressful puppy mill conditions that hurt mom, which include being bred constantly without any rest time, can also potentially harm her puppies.

SUDDEN SEPARATION:

The first months of puppies' lives are a critical socialization period. Spending that time with their mother and littermates, along with slow weaning, helps prevent problems like extreme shyness, aggression, fear, and anxiety. But puppies born in puppy mills are usually

ALONE IN A CROWD: Puppies from cruel breeders are often shipped, typically by truck and sometimes over long distances, to brokers and eventually to pet stores. Puppies might also be shipped by plane. The transport is noisy, may be too hot or cold, and smells of other dogs and their comingled waste. The young puppy is now housed with unrelated dogs in an unfamiliar place without his mother or littermates. He might feel hungry, thirsty, scared, or sick. The puppy can be exposed to illness and disease. At the pet store, the puppy is again put into new, unfamiliar surroundings and handled by many different people. This is not a promising way to start a new life.

BE THEIR VOICE — FIGHT AGAINST ANIMAL CRUELTY TODAY. STOP LICENSING BAD BREEDERS! This story could aid tremendously as we work to educate the public and expose inhumane breeders.

MAME

At The Reagle Music Theatre of Greater Boston Is a Satisfying Banquet — Don't Miss Out

One of my favorite lines from Mame is "Life is a banquet and most poor sons of bitches are starving." The production of Mame now playing at The Reagle Music Theatre of Greater Boston in Waltham is a delicious feast of this classic Broadway musical. It will nourish your theatrical soul.

Led by uber talented Leigh Barrett as Patrick Dennis's Auntie Mame, the entire cast is solid and tight. Ms. Barrett who thrilled audiences in last year's Lyric Stage production of Gypsy has met, or I would argue, even exceeded that performance here. Leigh Barrett delivers what is best described in the words of the great theatre critic Kenneth Tynan, "a high definition performance." She is stage presence personified.

This is the story of the "live life to the fullest" Mame who has taken on the care of her nephew Patrick Dennis. Mame faces many obstacles in watching over young Patrick, including threats to have him taken away from her for her unconventional lifestyle, as well as financial ruin (the play is set in the 1920s and 30s when the stock market crash destroyed many people's finances), but you can't keep her down.

While Ms Barrett's performance is something to behold, she is not on the Reagle's stage by herself. In fact, she is accompanied by 38 other highly talented actors who light up the theatre along with a full orchestra, a rarity today and such a him you will understand why pleasure, led by Dan Rodriguez. Upon entering the theatre I could hear the musicians tuning up. This lends an air of anticipation and excitement to the evening.

Regarding the other performers; well, there are too many to mention by name and any omissions are in no way a slight against any of them. Eleven vear old Ben Choi-Harris who pays young Patrick Dennis is a rising star who more than held his own playing opposite Leigh Barrett in the first act. I had to check to make sure this wasn't a fifty year old veteran actor heavily disguised to look like a boy, as Ben looks as if he has been on the stage for years. The duet between Mame and young Patrick on My Best Girl is just beautiful. Their warmth and love are fully conveyed to the audience. Mame's nephew also makes a fine martini.

Katie O'Reilly takes on the role of the homely and lovable Agnes Gooch, who learns to open up and let go; well, a bit too much. In Gooch's Song, Ms O'Reilly shows incredible comedic timing while keeping her character real and sympathetic.

Mark Linehan, seen last year at the Reagle as Professor Harold Hill in The Music Man, plays Beau, the Southern Gentleman who falls for Mame and takes her hand in marriage bringing her love and wealth. He also ends up taking another fall, literally, while traveling with his new bride. Mr. Linehan has appeared on the Reagle's stage eight times and once you see they keep bringing him back.

Mame's house servant Ito is played by Simon Rogers. Mr.

Rogers brings a depth to this loyal character while not sinking into caricature. The laughs are never at him, but with him. He, along with Vera, Mame, Patrick, and Miss Gooch are all family.

Speaking of Vera Charles, this has to be a dream role for many actors, and Maureen Keiller is having her dream come true. Ms Keiller is hysterical as the "world's greatest lush" and dear but difficult friend of Mame's. In fact, they are Bosom Buddies which they sing together in one of the many well known songs from the play. Ms Keiller also gives a hilarious performance on the number The Man In The Moon Is Lady.

At the beginning of Act II the role of young Patrick transitions to the older Patrick played by Will Burke. The reprise of the song My Best Girl is begun by young Patrick and moves smoothly to older Patrick. It's a touching moment.

Mame is directed and choreographed by Eileen Grace and the stage is filled with music and dance. The large cast is always in synch, and if you love dancing you will not be disappointed. It is a treat to see and hear them work the boards.

If He Walked Into My Life Today is one of the better known songs from Mame, but it is often not heard in context and is usually thought of as a romantic song about lost love. Seeing it sung here by Ms Barrett you fully grasp the feelings of doubt and regret Mame has over whether or not she has made the right choices in how she raised Patrick. Every parent feels this way at one time or another.

The title song, which closes the first act, is a lavish musical number that fully allows the audience to see what a classic Broadway Musical looks like. The stage is filled with dancers and singers all moving about effortlessly while performing their hearts out. As I was exiting the theatre I could hear people singing and humming the tunes. That's a nice feeling.

Artistic Director Robert J. Eagle founded The Reagle Musical Theatre of Greater Boston fifty-one years ago and it is a gift to have his creation still going strong after all that time. I suspect it easily has another fifty ahead of it. If you haven't yet been there, well, what are you waiting for? If you have, I'm sure you won't want to miss the current production. Mame is playing now through June 23rd, and the theater is easy to find and has plenty of parking.

As the Mame household reminds us, there are times We Need A Little Christmas, and I couldn't think of a better Christmas present with which to begin your summer.

The Reagle Music Theatre of Greater Boston is located at 617 Lexington Street, Waltham.

Saint Thomas of Cori

by Bennett Molinari and Richard Molinari

Thomas was born to poor parents on June 4, 1655 in Cori near Rome. In his childhood, he was dubbed "the little saint" due to the recognition of his personal holiness.

Thomas knew a childhood marked by the premature loss, first of his mother and then of his father, thus being left alone at the age of 14 to look after his younger sister. Shepherding sheep, he learned wisdom from the simplest things. Once his sisters were settled in good marriages, Thomas was free to follow the inspiration that for some years he had kept in silence to belong completely to God in the Religious Life of a Franciscan. He had come to know the Franciscans in his own village at the Franciscan monastery. He was received into the Order, and sent to Orvieto to fulfill his novitiate year, beginning his novitiate on February 7, 1667. After professing his vows according to the Rule of St. Francis and completing his #### theological studies, he was ordained to the priesthood in 1683. He was immediately nominated vice master of novices at Holy Trinity monastery in Orvieto, since his superior recognized at once his gifts.

After a short time, Fr. Thomas heard of the hermitages that were beginning to bloom in the Order and the intention of the superiors of the Roman Province to inaugurate one at the monastery at Civitella (today Bellegra). His request was accepted, and in 1684, Thomas knocked at the door of the poor monastery, saying, "I am Fr. Thomas of Cori, and I come here to become holv!"

From then, Fr. Thomas lived at Bellegra until death, with the exception of six years in which he was Guardian at the monastery of Palombara, where he initiated the Hermitage modeled after the one at Bellegra.

Thomas was Canonized on November 21, 1999 by Pope John Paul II. The Feast Day of Saint Thomas of Cori is celebrated on January 11th.

JANET JACKSON - CONTROL (Vinyl) A&M + UMe

A&M/UMe have released Janet Jackson's iconic mega platinumselling third album Control, for the first time on vinyl since the album's original release in 1986. The 42 catchy minutes of danceable music instantly established Janet as a global superstar in the music field. The singular fusion of musical styles, including rhythm and blues, funk, pop, soul, disco, and modern synthesized percussion, led to five chart-busting hit singles, "What Have You Done for Me Lately," "Nasty," "Control," "When I Think Of You," and "Let's Wait Awhile," all bolstered by tightly choreographed music videos. The success of Control zoomed up the Billboard chart, making history for having the longest continuous run on the Hot 100, with singles from one album, tallying a remarkable 65 consecutive weeks. Jackson's album was a career-defining statement from a singular artist, one who did it her way to prove that a visionary album with several hot, nasty grooves is quite worthy of re-visitation on vinyl. To date, Control has sold more than 10 million copies worldwide, to go along with her 2019 induction to the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame.

DUFF McKAGAN - TENDERNESS (CD + Vinyl) UMe

Duff McKagan is likely most recognizable to people as the bassist for a dozen years, with the hard rock band, Guns N' Roses during the late 1980s and early 1990s, before rejoining the band following their 2016 induction into the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame. His career description includes tours as a multi-instrumentalist, singer, songwriter and author. Tenderness is a solo album that is a collection of experiences McKagan endured in his two-and-a-half year journey covering the world with GNR during the band's "Not In This Lifetime Tour." The 11-tracks include the single "Chip Away*," on this country-flavored CD/vinyl gem, that explain McKagan's bouts of heartbreak, anger, fear, and confusion that he had to face. Grammy-winner Shooter Jennings handled the producing, backed by the Jennings' band, along with appearance by The Waters, and The Suicide Horn Section. The many highlights include the single and title cut, the piano-laden "Tenderness*," addressing domestic abuse and relationships with "Last September*," along with one of the many school tragedies via "Parkland*," and the encouragement of "Don't Look Behind You*." Titles that are marked with * are also on the vinyl portion's ten slices, along with "It's Not Too Late," "Wasted Heart," "Falling Down," "Breaking Rocks," and "Feel." All that, and a 40-page book of photos!

BOB MARLEY & THE WAILERS - LEGEND (2LP Vinyl) Island + UMe

Island Records/UMe celebrate the 35th anniversary of Bob Marley & The Wailers' Legend, the world's best-selling Reggae album of all time (28 million worldwide), with this 2LP vinyl release. A greatest hits compilation for the ages, Legends is the soundtrack to the remarkable life and recording career of Bob Marley, one of reggae music's most important and influential figures. This vinyl-only reissue comprises the original "BMW1" version of Legend, plus two original U.K.-only cassette bonus tracks, "Easy Skanking" and "Punky Reggae Party." The 16 songs that comprise Legend have literally defined a genre. Instantly recognizable tracks are "Get Up Stand Up," "One Love/People Get Ready," "I Shot The Sheriff," "Three Little Birds," "Jammin," and "Exodus." Plus anthems "No Woman No Cry" and "Is This Love" featuring backing vocals from The I Threes, an all-female trio comprised of Marley's wife Rita Marley, Judy Mowatt, and Marcia Griffiths. Marley's legacy lives on in the artists and generations he has influenced. Today, the spiritual, political, and musical resonance of the man's work continues to be felt around the world.

TANGERINE DREAM - 7 CLASSIC ALBUMS (CD) UMe + Virgin

Tangerine Dream is a German electronic music band formed in 1967 by Edgar Froese, and although the lineup has undergone a multitude of personnel changes, he alone had been the only continuous member until his death in 2015. Considered to be pioneers of the early days of electronica, and their association with Virgin Records (called "Virgin Years – 1974-1979"), produced albums that delved heavily into synthesizers and sequencers. This set of 7 Classic Albums have been re-mastered in stereo from original first-generation master tapes, and are comprised of, "Phaedra" (1974) 4 Tracks/2 Bonus, "Rubycon" (1975) 2 Tracks/1 Bonus, "Ricochet" (1975) 2 Tracks/2 Bonus, "Stratosfear" (1976) 4 Tracks/1 Bonus, "Encore" (1977) 4 Tracks/2 Bonus, "Cyclone" (1978) 3 Tracks/2 Bonus, and "Force Majeure" (1979) 3 Tracks/1 Bonus. Loved and revered worldwide for many decades, Tangerine Dream's influence was massive.

ROSANA ECKERT - SAILING HOME (CD) OA2/Origin Records

Rosana Eckert, vocalist/composer/arranger offers up a diverse, accomplished array of eleven song stylings on her fourth album, Sailing Home. Choosing to make this a guitar-driven album, rather than her normal piano-based approach, Rosana had a hand in penning all but one of the songs, "Empty Room," a ballad cowritten by Rosana's husband Gary, and Peter Eldridge. Eckert steps off with the breezy title track, "Sailing Home," trailed by the light swing of "Garby the Great," the tender "Someone Else's Life," adding an accordion edge for "Waiting," followed by the building vocals of "Miles of Blue," and hits the halfway point with the slowpaced "Blue Flower." Second half happenings feature the funk of "Coriander Stomp," the bossa nova beat of "Lovely Ever After," the confidence of "For Good," and finishes up with the haunting "Meant For Me."

REBUILDING A BRIDGE TO GET OUT OF A JAM?

As I was reading a recent Boston Globe news story, I was reminded of the history of the Long Island Bridge. Since the mid-90s this bridge was a bridge in trouble; too old and in need of major repairs!

Nothing has been done to the 19th-century Northern Avenue Bridge since the Evelyn Moakley Bridge was opened to traffic yards away, It did however, take the pressure of city officials to do anything about the bridge.

We have been watching this by Sal Giarratani bridge rust for over 20 years and since 2014, it was closed because it was unsafe.

Originally, the City was talking about turning the bridge into a tourist mall connecting the Seaport to Downtown. That idea went by the boards since no federal funds could be used for a non-working bridge. The city also would not receive any technical support from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. Plan A immediately sank. Plan B, the current one, would need the bridge open to pedestrians, bicyclists, and motor vehicles. Environmental and historical groups don't seem to like this option but what else can the City do?

Presently the bridge remains open because of maritime travel through it. When this bridge is rebuilt or rehabbed, it must remain an open bridge by federal jurisdiction.

The City would need gatekeepers there for boats to sail through. Remember, the City would come up with the money for either all or most of the expense.

Originally, the Moakley Bridge was to replace the Northern Avenue Bridge, but that never happened, and now everyone sees the need for two bridges down by the Greenway to get the always growing Seaport District access in and out. We need to put this bridge back into working order. Traffic demands it.

"Citizens abuse the open meeting law and public records requests in order to overwhelm and harass local officials," lawmakers said Monday. "Many towns in the Metro West region have been inundated with hundreds of frivolous open meeting law and public records law complaints, which has created disruption in town offices and an unnecessary waste of taxpayer money responding to those complaints," said Rep. David Linsky of Natick. At a public hearing of the Joint Committee on State Administration and Regulatory Oversight, Linsky joined Sen. Becca Rausch of Needham and town officials from Natick to advocate for a bill to adjust the requirements in the open meeting and public records request laws.

MEEHAN SAYS TUITION FREEZE HURTS UMASS

UMass President Martin T. Meehan in the Boston Globe states, "UMass is now one of only three public university systems in the country to have all of its undergraduate campuses ranked among the top 200 national universities by U.S. News & World Report. The university has achieved all that with only modest annual tuition increases, even while experiencing a double-digit decline in per student state funding since 2008, according to the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston."

However, now the Legislature is considering Senate budget language that would freeze tuition without funding the university's full budget request. More than 30 former trustees, appointed by both Democrats and Republicans, have spoken out against it, instead supporting the versions of the budget proposed by Governor Baker and the House.

A Nostalgic Remembrance

In the past, I've talked about Babbononno's fear of cars. The reason was that he preceded the automobile generation. Arriving in this world in 1875, the only means of transportation that didn't run on rail was something with wheels that was pulled by either a horse or donkey. His sons, my uncles Paul, Nick, and Gino, as well as my father, loved cars. They grew up with cars. They learned how to drive at a young age, and as soon as they could afford them, they bought cars. The difference in that generation of my family and me was that cars were a means of transportation for them, and for me, a luxury item with all of the creature comforts offered in todav's market. Dad bought a used 1937

Plymouth two-door sedan when I was born. He kept the car until 1949, when it had high miles on it and was falling apart. He couldn't even trade it due to its condition and wound up selling it for $75.00 to a young man who planned to use it in a demolition derby. His replacement purchase was a '49 Chevy, bought at Reese Chevrolet in East Boston. I accompanied him when he looked at their floor models and he picked one with a radio, a heater, full-sized hub caps, white wall tires, an offwhite marbleized steering wheel, some extra exterior chrome, Cello grill guards, and a hood ornament with a red plastic insert. This was high-end for a Chevy in 1949. Observing all of this as an 11-year-old, I came to the conclusion that a car was something more than just a means of transportation.

Dad's next car was a '54 Chevy Bel Air four-door with similar toys, as had the '49. This car was two-toned, with a robin's egg blue body and a white top. The only option Dad didn't get was an automatic shift. He didn't think they had been perfected. The next search for a car came in 1957. He and Uncle Nick both bought Pontiac hard tops, my uncle a two-door and Dad a four-door. Both had had Hydramatic transmissions, power steering, power brakes, hi-fi radios, and V8 engines. Dad said no to power windows and seats, claiming they hadn't been perfected yet. I was surprised he accepted the automatic shift and the two power options I mentioned. When Babbononno heard the price his son and son-in- law paid for the cars, he called them crazy. He told them, what they paid for their cars, they could have put down payments on houses. I remember him addressing Uncle Nick and my father in front of everyone at dinner one Sunday, "You takea da money you pay foh i due machine (the two cars), eh you putta da downa paymenta onna tree famiglia houza, you live a on one-a da floorza eh renta da utha two. Da two renta, dey pay foh da houza." No one said anything.

As time passed, Dad traded his '57 Pontiac for a 1962 Chevy, which was followed by a '66 Cadillac, a 1972 Ford, and his last car a 1979 Buick. Each of these had the options that Dad had considered "not perfected yet," power windows, seats, antenna, and an option he never used, air conditioning.

Babbononno became relaxed riding in these cars as the creature comforts put him at ease. To prevent him from criticizing his sons and his son-in-law about the prices paid for each new car, when he asked the price, Uncle Nick or my father would say that they had gotten a bargain and the cars only cost a few hundred dollars. The ladies in the family never said anything about the cars, they just rode in them. As far as they were concerned, they got you from one place to another and that's all that mattered. The only woman in the family who knew a little about cars was Aunt Ninna, Uncle Gino's wife. Babbononno and my mother used to say that Ninna drove like a man. I guess this was due to the fact that they knew nothing about cars and neither one ever drove.

I guess I acquired my love for cars watching Uncle Nick and my father care for their cars, washing, waxing them, and then vacuuming out the insides, after which, they would hang an air refresher from the rear view mirror to kill the smell of smoke. When it came time for me to buy my first car, it was at a point in time when I was in college and was playing music. I joined up with a couple of bandleaders and needed my own transportation to play on weekends. Dad had a mechanic friend in Malden who sold me a '54 Chevy that he had done over from bumper to bumper: motor job, transmission rebuild, new tires, new paint, and seat covers. I was on my way to fame and fortune.

I finished college owning that car and continued driving it after I started teaching. One day, a friend who was riding in the back seat attempted to climb out and wound up standing on the muffler. I pulled the rubber floor mat up and noticed that there was no floor. The car was rusting away and it was time for another car. The father of one of my students sold Fords and I went to see him, hoping I could get a deal. He sold me a 1958 Thunderbird. The car was three years old, but had very little mileage. I brought my bass violin with me to see if it could fit. That '58 T-bird was the first of the four-seaters, and the bass fit. I bought it. Everyone liked the car even Babbononno who felt comfortable riding shotgun from a bucket seat.

I kept the car for two years, all the while planning to buy a convertible as my next car. When a used 1960 Cadillac convertible came my way, I traded the T-bird and rode with the top down from the first warm spring day until it was too cold. In 1966, I traded the Caddy for a Chrysler Imperial convertible, which was followed by a 1970 Eldorado, a 1972 Lincoln Mark II, a 1978 Town Car, an '82 Coupe de Ville, an '88 Town Car, a '92 Sedan de Ville, a ,98 Sedan de Ville, a 2004 STS, and a 2006 DTS, which I still drive. All of them were purchased used, but had and have all the toys and creature comforts that I like. Like Dad and Uncle Nick before me, I keep my cars well-oiled and very clean.

I've developed a hobby surrounding cars. I have three antique cars (25 years old or older). I own a 1962 Lincoln Continental, a 1966 Thunderbird, and a 73 Mercedes 450 SL. My closest friend, Dean Saluti has several; British antiques, and we constantly compare notes about leaky transmissions, faulty carburetors, and whatever else is wrong with the old vehicles.

If Babbononno or Dad were around today, they would think we were crazy with this type of a hobby, but as I tell people when they ask why, "I don't drink, I don't take drugs, I don't smoke cigarettes, I don't chase stray women ... I need something, so it's old cars."

Babbononno did enjoy riding in one of my convertibles in his later years. I picked him up for Easter Sunday dinner in 1971, and he made me lower the top and raise the right front seat in my Imperial as high as it would go. With him looking tall, we drove around the corner to where Easter Mass was just ending at his church, and he waived at all of the old ladies exiting the church, yelling, "Buona Pasqua, signore" (Happy Easter, ladies). Toward the end, I guess he really did enjoy riding in my cars.

GOD BLESS AMERICA

THOUGHTS BY DAN ABOUT THIS & THAT

with Daniel A. DiCenso

My Political Journey

Generally, I tend to avoid political discussions. However, it is only recently that I came to see how useless an exercise it is. Most people have their minds made up and shouting from the opposition will only strengthen their conviction. So be it. I often employ that response as well. Perhaps listening and understanding are the lost arts?

Maybe, but look at the way social media has devalued debate. Here's an all too typical scenario. Person A believes in Ideology A. Person B lambasts him and posts an article from a news source Person B knows can be depended on to agree with Person B and uses it to "prove" Person A wrong. Now, all Person A has to do is repeat the cycle and where does that leave them? If someone searches enough they can find an article that says exactly what they want it to say, and as long as it does any article will do. Of course, this goes for their opponent too ...

I will say that it has become hard to define myself politically, especially so in recent years. Only two things are clear to me. Early on, I was unclear about who I was politically and, two, people on the whole are a lot more complicated than the media and a two-party system would indicate. Perhaps it is futile to try to define anyone in easy terms ("liberal," "conservative," etc ...)

There are issues that put me toward the Left (marriage equality, abortion, for instance) and yet the Left would soon disown me for my support for the death penalty for first-degree murderers (actually my draconian attitude toward criminals as a whole) and my lack of patience with the hypersensitivity and thin-skinness that I find all too often shuts down debate.

When I first started college I considered myself a moderate Democrat but campuses have a habit (and it's only gotten worse) of reminding moderate liberals just how far removed they are from their committed cousins. I coasted a bit in college, championing our troops in Iraq, defending some of Bush's actions, but ultimately voting for John Kerry in 2004.

Yet, by the time I graduated from college I felt as if I had been pushed to the right of center by the more aggressive faction of the Left I was exposed to on campus. This was a rookie mistake, confusing the extreme faction I was exposed to, as representative of the base. Nonetheless, I then considered myself a "New England Republican." I supported marriage equality, environmental responsibility, love of country, and self-responsibility.

But then I started reading about the bureaucracy controlling our health-care system and how many citizens, through no fault of their own, were being shut out of life-saving operations. I fully realized the extent of the damage being done to the environment through a lack of control on corporations and I found myself at home with the Left.

It's important to note that I was never an arch-conservative nor a radical. I always represented the "lite" edition of both parties. For a while, moderation was welcome in the Left again and through the late 2000s to the early 2010s I found myself at home. By the middle of this decade, however, both parties have run to the fringe.

I don't know. Maybe I'm disillusioned with the two-party system and the current madness was an inevitability, but I have been struggling for about five years now as to where I fit in.

The closest I think I come to embodying a political party is Libertarianism. I'm a strong supporter of individual freedoms as well as many of the other pillars of Libertarianism. I believe no one has any business telling a woman what she can do with her body, two consenting adults what they can and can't do. If an adult wants to smoke pot I don't think I have any more right to deny it to them than I would a responsible adult drinking alcohol or smoking a cigar. We can't keep shutting down voices because "someone" finds them offensive. While educating citizens about sustainable living is admirable, passing laws prohibiting what they do in their private property is, I believe, a slippery slope. As much as Libertarianism overlaps with the two main political parties it is also not hard to see why both parties are put off by it.

But even with Libertarianism I am not a perfect match nor do I expect to be. Libertarianism's passion for individuality sometimes does go too far. Government intervention has curbed environmental disasters and will be needed to fix our failing healthcare system.

Maybe we shouldn't preoccupy ourselves with labels. I wager that few of us fit into any neat category. And that, after all, is what makes each of us interesting.

A Big Name is not the Secret Ingredient

Consumers of many products or services are frequently offered a choice; go with the little guy or the big, branded behemoth. This is true whether you're baking blueberry muffins or hiring an investment advisor. Before you succumb to the will of marketing myth makers, let's examine your choices in both decisions.

Let's talk about the legendary Jordan Marsh blueberry muffin. Mention these treats to Bostonians of a certain age and you'll likely evoke blissful memories of downtown shopping trips with Grandma. If children behaved they were rewarded with muffins glistening with crunchy sugar on the top and slightly tart, juicy blueberries in the middle. At the right time of day the appetizing scent of the muffins baking even overpowered Grandma's Jean Nate' perfume. The muffins were so good, amateur bakers eagerly sought out the recipe. Yet the recipe was a closely guarded secret and many were misled by the counterfeit concoctions of parish cookbooks and handwritten index cards.

One day, the culinary cliffhanger was almost solved. The food section of the Boston Globe featured a recipe formulated by pastry chef Nick Malgier. It seemed the secret ingredient was buttermilk, the acid in it helps keep the muffins moist. The Wicked Smart Investor used this recipe a few times enjoying great adulation from all that devoured my muffins. Imagine my dismay years later when Jordan Marsh baker John Pupek revealed the true recipe with absolutely no buttermilk! I felt like a fraud, passing my muffins off as legit Jordan Marsh when they were just another fake. Dejected but determined, I baked muffins using both recipes and held a few blind taste tests. The muffins baked with buttermilk won by an overwhelming majority. This may rock Bostonians right to their "R" dropping core but just because it is a Jordan

Marsh blueberry muffin does not mean it is the best blueberry muffin.

So, are investment advisors from big institution better than the small independent outfit? That is a question for you to decide. Since I'm independent I obviously have a bias. Let me do my best to educate my readers objectively.

First, you do not lose any fraud protection with an independent advisor when a third party has custody of your money. Usually a large outfit, this custodian offers many checks and balances that assure your advisor never has physical custody of your funds or the reporting function. You receive statements directly from the custodian bypassing the advisor.

Next, an independent advisor usually has more freedom of investment choices. If your advisor works for a firm with proprietary products it is very likely you'll be placed in those products even if they are not best for you. Or, the advisor may have a quota for certain third party products that also fall short. Don't be fooled into thinking that advisors from big firms have the best research and better returns will likely follow. The internet has democratized investment research, small players have access, too.

Finally, larger firms also tend to be publicly traded and/or have layers of expensive management. The constant pressure to produce growing revenues and pay large salaries reduces the ability for larger firms to be fee competitive. Frequently, advisors at these firms are paid less, fueling high turnover. You may never speak to the same advisor twice. Smaller firms usually enjoy less turnover.

The stock market simply does not reward investors based on the size of their advisory firm. The myth makers be damned. I recommend choosing a fee based advisor offering great service and held to the fiduciary standard. That's the crunchy sugar on top.

his impeachment and even his resignation.

Trump said he would probably take information about his opponents from foreign nations during an ABC interview that aired last week. He called it "oppo research" and said he would not necessarily call the FBI if a foreign nation offered him information. His comments come after special counsel Robert Mueller wrapped up an investigation into Russian meddling in the 2016 election.

"There's nothing wrong with listening," Trump said. "It's not an interference. They have information, I think I'd take it." Take it or not is one thing, but babbling on TV, he gives himself yet another self-inflicting wound. Why does he keep doing this? Senseless to me.

The LA Dodgers lefty Hyun-Jin Ryu is putting up numbers like never seen before. As of this past weekend, he held a 9-1 record, 1.36 ERA and his strikeout/walk ration is 15.40 to 0.52. Where did this kid come from? He's looking better than Bob Gibson and Sandy Koufax COMBINED. Right now this Dodgers team is so pitcher rich, it could be one of the best starting rotation since the '60s with the Dodgers and Yankees, or the '70s with the Orioles.

Looks like Shohei Ohtani won't be pitching again this season as he recovers from Tommy John surgery. However, he did hit .281 with 7 homers and 26 RBIs in 31 games. Last week, he hit for the cycle against the Rays.

Big Power Spike in the 2010-19 Decade

Home runs are up right now but by the end of the year, the decade closes with home runs falling back to the '80s, pre-PED Era. Top home run hitters of each of the last four decades include Willie Stargell (296), Mike Schmidt (313), Mark McGwire (405), and Alex Rodriguez (435).

For the current decade, to date, we have Giancarlo (305), Nelson Cruz (312), and Edwin Encarnacion (314). We are going back to the future in the '80s once again.

Speaking of Encarnacion

Edwin Encarnacion is definitely in a happy place as he went from the last place team in the AL West to the NY Yankees. With the Yankees and Rays battling in the AL East, his slugging power will certainly make the Yanks much more of a threat to the Red Sox in third place. Encarnacion is leading the American League with 21 homers, and Gary Sanchez second in homers with 20, you can't forget that both Aaron Judge and Giancarlo Stanton are soon to return to the lineup. Together these four power hitters will look like the old Murderers' Row of the Yankees back in the Babe Ruth era.

The AL East Race could be the best in decades with the Yankees, Rays, and Red Sox vying for dominance. Time will tell real soon, as baseball moves into July.

Happy Birthday To ...

Happy Birthday to Calvin Schiraldi who just turned 57 years old! He played for the Sox in 1986-87. He was great in his first seven innings in the '86 World Series before imploding in Games 6 and 7 ... Today, he is head coach at St. Michael's Catholic Academy in Austin, Texas. Been there since 1997, and has two state titles under his belt.

The Weigh In

Ray Robinson and Jake LaMotta

Fighters have always weighed in before a fight. This ritual used to take place the day of the fight, usually in the early afternoon. With heavyweights it wasn't as important as with the other divisions as there is no limit on what weight the big guys can fight at. In the other categories it used to be watched closely because if a fighter did not come in below the limit for his division he would be forced to shed the extra pounds within a couple of hours. If he didn't, the fight could be canceled, he could agree to pay a fine, or, if it was a title fight, the two camps could agree to go on with the bout without having the championship on the line.

With the heavyweights, it more of a case of seeing what kind of shape the fighters were in. It was a bit like predicting earnings before a company makes its quarterly financial report. If a company exceeds expectations, its stock will rise, if not, the stock will take a hit.

In a heavyweight fight a fighter coming in overweight, or even too light, could have an effect on the odds.

Today, the weigh in is quite different. While in the past it was expected the fighters would enter the ring weighing pretty close to what the scales said earlier that day. Now fighters step on the Toledo a day or two before the bout and can put on as much as ten, fifteen, or more pounds by fight time. Quite often you will see one fighter who looks much bigger than another. That's because he is.

Another difference is in how the ritual of the weigh in is con-

Henry Armstrong and Barney Ross

a fairly serious affair. Both fighters would appear and take turns stepping up to be weighed while the other looked on. A doctor would give each a brief examination, and then the two would shake > hands and wish each other luck while photographers snapped pictures. With rare exception, great sportsmanship was displayed as each showed respect for the other.

Somewhere along the line, probably starting with Cassius Clay vs Sonny Liston in 1964, this ritual began to take on a circus atmosphere. While what happened that day in Miami was very unusual for the times, and remained rare for a number of years, it has now gotten even worse and has become the norm. Fighters hurl obscenities at each other while pushing, shoving, and throwing wild punches. It has devolved into something more like pro wrestling. It's also interesting to see today's fighters standing on the > scales and striking body builder posers, another thing taken from wrestling. At its best it is silly, but it is more often childish and demeaning to the sport and its participants.

I suppose it is just another reflection of the changes we see in society. As for me, I would like to see a return to the old decorum that made us look with respect upon the athletes who were going to step into the ring that night. Clowns may be funny in a circus, but for those of us who looked at boxing as a serious profession, it is depressing to witness. Could you imagine Jack Dempsey, Joe Louis, Rocky ducted. Throughout most of boxing history it was Marciano, Ray Robinson, or the hundreds of other great champions behaving like that? I can't either.

HOOPS and HOCKEY in the HUB

by Richard Preiss

Stoicism — the characteristic of being able to endure pain without engaging in overtly outward emotional displays — was very much in evidence by the Boston Bruins in the days that encompassed the immediate aftermath of their loss in the seventh and deciding game of the 2019 Stanley Cup Final.

On breakup day at Warrior Arena in Brighton, when everyone packs up and scatters across the globe for what will be a relatively short summer, one could tell that everyone was hurting.

For some the pain was physical. Zdeno Chara will continue to have two metal plates, plus wires within his right cheek for the next five weeks or so as he recovers from a broken jaw. Others will have medical procedures for less serious injuries.

All are expected to be fully recovered for the opening of camp three months from now — and ready to take the ice against New Jersey on the road in the first preseason game on September 16th.

Meanwhile, all are enduring in relative silence the painful thoughts of coming so close to their ultimate goal, only to be denied the crowning glory by virtue of their 4-1 setback in Game 7 at the hands of the St. Louis Blues.

To a person, every player indicated that the 2018-2019 Bruins had been a very special team, one that had grown extremely close over the course of their extended time together — from the first preseason games in China against the Calgary Flames back in September to the sound of the final buzzer as time expired at 10:41 p.m. on the concluding night of the Stanley Cup Final in June.

Every player took it hard, but none more perhaps than Brad Marchand. The veteran forward, who has a history of questionable behavior on the ice over the years, appeared a very different person as he met with media members two days after the final proceedings in the Garden had come to a conclusion.

"This is going to hurt forever. You're never going to get over that," said Marchand. "Nobody is going to be able to say anything that is going to make us feel better. Nobody is going to be able to do anything that is going to make us feel better. Even if we win the Cup next year it isn't going to go away — the pain of losing."

The player, who led the team in scoring in both the regular season (36-64-100) and the playoffs (9-14-23), seemed wistful, his voice almost cracking at times as he related his thoughts about the special bonding among his teammates.

"A huge factor in being a good team was our camaraderie, our chemistry. Everyone got along extremely well, everyone cared about each other — and showed that."

For most of the other players, there were sentiments of disappointment, although Jake DeBrusk did manage a smile or two during his interview. We thought that was a good sign — life does go on and in a way, it was a preview of additional sessions with media members a few days later.

Those took place at the Garden after Father's Day Weekend and it was obvious that a corner had been turned.

For example, Bruins President Cam Neely, captured on television as being extremely upset over a referee's apparent non-call, was able to smile a bit when discussing the officiating in the series.

"I think everybody sees what we all see as far as officiating goes and unfortunately you're going to have human error. But you want to get it right. They (NHL leadership) talk about getting it right, so I know the league is going to look hard at it. There are so many camera angles now and so many replays that you can see things that the referees missed. But that's going to happen from time to time. They're going to miss some calls and make the wrong call at times."

Neely also said it was time to move on. "Coming into next year, we have to learn from this year. We can certainly try and enjoy the year even though it's difficult when you don't win the last game, especially Game 7 to win it all. It's heartbreaking, really. But we have to move on from that and look at our club and see where we can make improvements."

The fact that the core group of veterans — those that remain from the 2011 Cup-winning team — are now one additional year older was touched upon.

Neely indicated that he and GM Don Sweeney have discussed the possibility that the core group still has the skills and capacity to have the opportunity to make another serious run at the Cup.

"There was a conversation early on about how do we take this core that won in 2011, and give them another opportunity while they are still in their prime. We still feel that way. We still think that they do have some good hockey left in them."

Head Coach Bruce Cassidy, also several days removed from the initial disappointment, was able to manage a smile or two at times. Going forward, he indicated that one of the most significant challenges might come early in the fall.

"I believe my biggest challenge as a coach will be how to get these guys ready and be good in October. I really believe there's merit to the mental part of it (the Cup run) taking a toll. I've already started discussing that with our staff and even some of the players at exit meetings. I do believe that will be our challenge — and that's a good one to have. We finished the way we did so we'll have to make sure we're on top of that."

Lastly, this summer will be a different one at the Garden as well. "We'll be closing the building for roughly 10 weeks this summer," stated Bruins Chief Executive Officer Charlie Jacobs. "That means no concerts, no shows, and no events whatsoever."

The construction will be extensive. "Literally, every seat in the entire bowl of TD Garden will be changed over the summer," noted Jacobs. Some aisles will be realigned and some seats will be added, increasing the capacity of the building. "By fall, our goal is to have one of the best fan experiences in the entire National Hockey League."
